Lewis Agrees To Separate Dixie Talks On Contract

Mine Union Head Suggests That Open Soft Coal Sessions Commence June 6

By Sam Stavisky

Post Reporter

In what appeared to be a rare conciliatory mood, John L. Lewis yesterday agreed to separate contract negotiations with the Southern Coal Producers Association, whose members mine about one-third of the Nation's soft coal.

The United Mine Workers' leader, who last year agreed to deal with the Southern operators as a group only under compulsion of a court injunction, also accepted a proposal that the contract negotiations be open to the press and public.

In a politely worded letter, John L. replied to a notice of contract termination as of June 30 and request for negotiations on a new contract, sent him 10 days ago by Joseph E. Moody, president of the Southern Coal Producers Association.

Lewis suggested that the negotiations sessions start June 6 at Bluefield, W. Va., with 36 union and 36 association representatives participating.

Observers noted that in its first letter the Southern operators had asked for "prompt" beginning of negotiations, whereas June 6 was more than five weeks away. Also, Lewis has hitherto conducted major negotiation sessions with the operators here in Washington.

There was some speculation that John L., a masterly tactician, was perhaps planning to isolate the "tougher" Southern operators—as he did in 1947—while working out a settlement with the Northern producers and the "captive" mines owned by the major steel mills.

This past week, Lewis made another conciliatory gesture—in public. He called a press conference and expressed the hope that a new contract could be written "without strife or economic loss."

However, the latest issue of the United Mine Workers Journal, published yesterday, gave every indication that whatever else Lewis had in mind, he was certainly not getting softer in his attitude to the coal mine operators.

The operators "haven't progressed in their thought or accepted as a permanent condition of contract the maintenance of a necessary health, welfare and pension fund," a UMW Journal editorial declared.

"They are opposed to return of the seven-hour day which prevailed when the Nation entered World War II, to say nothing of a six-hour shift."

It is believed the mine workers will ask for a six-hour day without reduction in wages, as well as an increase in the present 20-cents-a-ton levy for their welfare fund.

Choking Boy Loses Race With Death; Traffic Blamed

New York, April 30 (U.P.)—Five-year-old Anthony Bardza, jr., swallowed an empty .22-caliber cartridge today while he was playing on a beach near his Long Island home.

His sister, Carol, 11, found him choking and his father rushed him in the family automobile toward Rockaway Beach Hospital.

He tried frantically to get his car through the heavy traffic. He blew the car horn angrily. He broke every rule of the road. Irate motorists yelled for him to calm down.

Finally Bardza got to the hospital, which was only 2 miles from his home. Doctors pronounced little Tony dead on arrival. If he had arrived sooner, they said, he might have been saved.

Damage $2 Million

String of Midwest Tornadoes Kills Five and Injures 85

By The Associated Press

A series of spring tornadoes flailed Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas Saturday, killing at least five persons, injuring 85, and damaging property up to 2 million dollars.

The swirling storms destroyed building, smashed automobiles and uprooted trees. Many of the twisters were accompanied by torrential rain and baseball-size hailstones.

The deaths were at Norman, Meeker, McLoud and Utica, Okla., and Bonham, Tex. In addition, a fifth man is missing at Norman, home of the University of Oklahoma.

The name of the Norman victim, a National Guardsman, was not released by the guard.

The latest tornado reported was at Utica, 15 miles southeast of Durant in southeastern Oklahoma. Newt Pruitt, 30, was killed when a small tornado struck his farm house. His wife, 28, was critically injured.

A man died of a heart attack as he took shelter in a ditch from a storm near Bonham, Tex.

Seven-year-old Ann True was killed at Meeker, 30 miles east of Oklahoma City. A tornado struck the car in which she was riding and carried it nearly half a mile. Two others in the car were injured.

Four houses were destroyed in the Shawnee City Lake area, 11 miles east of Shawnee. Two persons were critically hurt.

One of the tornadoes whisked by the University of Oklahoma campus at Norman and upset a legend. It also put 42 persons in hospitals.

The legend, traced to the Indians, is that Norman, is tornado-proof because of its topography.

$108,000 Loan By Bank Pays U. S. Workers

No Security Required Of 280, Unpaid Due to Funds Bill Stalemate

By Chalmers M. Roberts

Post Reporter

The American Security & Trust Co. has made an unsecured loan of $108,000 to pay salaries to some 280 Government workers left payless because Congress is still arguing over the bill appropriating the necessary money.

As a result of the apparently unprecedented action, about 150 employes in the Office of the Housing Expediter, Temporary E, late Friday drew private bank checks averaging around $300—pay due them April 15 and Friday.

Another 130 or so, who left the office before the word of the loan reached them, will be paid Monday.

But thousands of other Government employes, both here and elsewhere in the Nation, will continue to go payless—unless the bank loan should set a new fashion for meeting Government payrolls.

The loan calls for 4 per cent interest, unusually low for an unsecured note, and the Government employes will pay it at a rate of approximately 1 cent per day per $100 drawn.

If it takes another 10 days for Congress to approve the money, for example, an employe drawing $300 would pay about 30 cents interest.

"We practically had dancing in the corridors—but without music," said John J. Madigan, deputy administrator for the administration. "They were surprised and very happy when we issued a mimeographed sheet about the loan and

Dutch Hold Only Main Java Roads

Flushing, N. Y., April 30 (U.P.)—Dutch forces control only the main towns and roads in most of the former Republican territory in the East Indies, the United Nations Commission for Indonesia said today.

The report, dated April 22, said that in areas of western and eastern Java which were under Dutch control prior to December 19, 1948, when a U. N. cease-fire was imposed, there are concentrations of Republican forces.

"Hostilities have continued in Java and Sumatra," the report said.

A Night at the Opera

Aida Silenced as Musicians Get Pay Straightened Out

By Paul Hume

Post Reporter

Tenor Napoleon Reed was hardly half through Celeste Aida last night when the National Negro Opera Company's performance of Verdi's opera was suddenly interrupted.

While the capacity crowd at the Armory craned to see what was happening, a representative of the Musicians Union No. 161 (American Federation of Musicians) walked up to the conductor and ordered him to stop the musicians.

At that point, a speaker for the opera company announced that "due to circumstances beyond our control, there will be a brief interruption."

After a pause of five minutes, during which the curtain was closed, the opera was begun again at the beginning of the aria in which Reed had been interrupted.

A spokesman for the musicians' union later said that full settlement for the orchestra had not been accounted for. And union officials just wanted to get some things straightened out. Most of the 45-piece orchestra was drawn from the National Symphony.

Union officials also said that it was agreed to permit the performance to continue and that a bill would be submitted to the company for overtime since original plans called for quitting about midnight. Lengthy intermissions and delays in staging accounted for an extra hour running time in spite of cuts of more than an entire scene.

The opera, upon resuming, fre-

Huge Guided Bomb Seen Within Year

McNarney Also Tells Of Sound-Exceeding Planes and Rockets For Interceptors

By the United Press

The chief of the Air Materiel Command predicted yesterday that the Air Force will have ready for operational use within a year a 12,000-pound bomb that can be guided all the way to the target.

Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, head of the Air Materiel Command, Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, also said in an interview—in which he amplified recent disclosures to the Society of Automotive Engineers—that:

1. United States aircraft engineers and manufacturers have the know-how to produce operational faster-than-sound combat planes now. But he said the Air Force plans to wait until at least three more experimental models similar to the supersonic X-1 rocket plane have been tested.

The X-1-A, being built now, is designed to fly 1700 miles an hour. Sound-speed at sea level is about 760 miles an hour. The X-1 has been flown many times at speeds "several hundred" miles an hour faster than sound.

2. The conventional machine-guns on interceptor fighter planes will be replaced within a "relatively short" time with rocket missiles having a built-in radar homing device. This device will guide the missiles right to an enemy bomber regardless of what evasive action it takes.

These rockets, McNarney said, will be launched several miles from an enemy bomber, track it down at supersonic speed and explode within lethal range by means of a proximity fuse.

McNarney declined to say how many years a "relatively short" time is. Other important sources said that in aviation research it usually means about five years.

3. American research engineers have made "great progress" recently toward development of devices to guide missiles with speeds up to 700 miles an hour and ranges of 5000 miles. But "pinpoint accuracy" hasn't yet been reached, McNarney said, and "push button" warfare with such guided missiles "is still in the rather distant future."

4. Research engineers are working on development of a multi-stage rocket missile capable of a speed of about 4000 miles an hour. Development of such a missile is not likely before "perhaps a decade," McNarney said. It would be launched from the ground in defense against attack by enemy missiles approaching from space beyond the earth's atmosphere.

5. Aerial cameras have been perfected that will take clear detail pictures at altitudes from 40,000 to 100,000 feet and in which railroad ties can be counted.

6. The Air Force has abandoned research on piston engines. Twelve new jet engines—including turbo-jets, turbo-props, ram and pulse jets—are being developed.

7. "Several" new experimental jet bombers are being developed. They include a light bombardment type for support of ground forces, a long-range heavy and a medium bomber to replace the "work-horse" B-29 and B-50s. The experimental heavy, if it pans out, could replace the B-36, now the world's largest bomber, which has six piston and four jet engines.

Red Troops Told U. S. Plans War

Vassilevsky Asks Strength of Arms In May Day Order; Hits Atlantic Pact

London, April 30 (U.P.)—Soviet Armed Forces Minister Alexander Vassilevsky exhorted Soviet troops tonight to "develop to their utmost their fighting steadfastness" in the face of "the danger of a new war which ruling circles of America want to unleash."

In a May Day order of the day, quoted by Moscow Radio, Vassilevsky declared:

"While engaged in the building of communism, the Soviet people never forget the danger of a new war which ruling classes of the United States of America want to unleash.

"Contrary to the wishes of the broad masses of the people, they are conducting preparations for a third world war.

Attacks Atlantic Pact

The order was Vassilevsky's first important public statement since he succeeded N. A. Bulganin last month as armed forces minister.

Elaborating, Vassilevsky said:

"An irrefutable proof of this aggressive policy is the Atlantic Pact which represents a serious threat to peace.

"Expressing the basic interests of the peoples of the Soviet Union, the Soviet government persistently pursues a policy of peace and friendship among the peoples and resolutely exposes the instigators of war.

"The whole of progressive mankind approves this peace-loving policy of the Soviet state.

"The Soviet armed forces constantly remember their task — to stand vigilantly on guard over the state interests of their motherland."

"In the coming summer months of training, the personnel of the land troops, the air force and naval forces, are obliged to achieve new successes in military and political training.

"The soldiers of the Army, the Air Force and the Navy should observe exemplary military discipline and develop to the utmost their fighting steadfastness and endurance.

"The whole of the officer personnel should, day by day, improve and perfect the work of training and educating their subordinates."

Artillery Salutes Ordered

The order said:

"Comrades, soldiers and sailors, sergeants and petty officers, I congratulate you on May Day.

"To mark the international holiday of the working people, I hereby order that a salute of 20 artillery salvoes be fired today in the capital of the motherland—Moscow—in the capitals of the union republics, as well as in Kaliningrad, Lvov, Kharbarovsk, Vladivostok, Port Arthur, and in the hero cities of Leningrad, Stalingrad, Sevastopol, and others.

"Long live the Soviet Union, the bulwark of peace and democracy throughout the world!

"Long live the heroic Soviet people and their armed forces!

"Long live the glorious Communist Party!

"Long live our leader and teacher—great and beloved Stalin!"

Departure From Policy

Reappointment of J. R. Young Indorsed by Board of Trade

The Washington Board of Trade yesterday gave its "unqualified indorsement" to reappointment of District Commissioner John Russell Young when his term expires May 17.

At a meeting yesterday, the group's board of directors also named Frederick P. H. Siddons, vice president of the American Security and Trust Co., as Board of Trade president for the coming year. He succeeds Leon Chatelain, jr., Washington architect.

In its resolution backing Young, the Board of Trade explained that "names of a great number of citizens of the District have been advanced from various sources" for the Commissioner's post.

In view of this, the board said that in spite of its "general policy . . . to refrain from making recommendations with respect to specific persons for appointment to public office," it had decided to take a stand in "this pressing issue."

Board action follows a statement April 21 by Chatelain, lauding Young for his "conscientious interest in the welfare of Washington" but declaring he favored a policy of "no attempt to influence the President of the United States" in his selection of a Commissioner.

Text of the resolution, which was sent to the White House immediately, follows:

"WHEREAS, John Russell Young has served the District of Columbia as one of its three governing Commissioners for three terms, and has rendered highly acceptable service in this office, and

Agreement on Berlin Is Reported Imminent; U. N. Head Optimistic

Talks With Soviet Deputy Reported At Details Stage; Jessup Confers Here

By John M. Hightower

Associated Press Staff Writer

Informal talks with Russia on ending the Berlin blockade were understood yesterday to have progressed to the question of details, such as dates.

Russia is said to have reassured the western powers that it is fully prepared to drop the Berlin barriers if the West will end its counterblockade and schedule a four-power meeting on Germany.

Although Western authorities are still wary, this apparently means that Russia has determined not to argue for a halt in the formation of a western German government as a condition pending the proposed session of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

A strongly optimistic attitude was shown by Dr. Herbert V. Evatt, president of the United Nations Assembly. He said in New York that "there is every reason to anticipate" the ending of the Berlin dispute. He said it would make way for a fresh approach to peace settlements for the Far East as well as Germany.

"Other Meetings" Due

The State Department, which earlier had talked quite freely about the quiet negotiations, clammed up on whatever American Ambassador Philip C. Jessup reported here yesterday.

Jessup met in New York Friday with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Jacob A. Malik. After the conference the Ambassador's aides would say only that it was a "satisfactory" meeting and the Russians as usual would not talk at all. Jessup reported to Secretary of State Acheson Friday night by phone, then came to Washington for policy talks with other department officials.

Jessup met with Assistant Secretary of State Dean Rusk, one of Acheson's chief political officers, and Charles E. Bohlen, department counselor and Russian expert.

Through press officer Michael J. McDermott, he also disclosed that "there will be other meetings" between him and Malik.

Two Policy Jumps

From other sources it was learned the United States intends to talk with Britain and France about whether the New York negotiations have reached the point where they should now be broadened to include not only Jessup and Malik but also representatives of the other two Western powers.

This means that authorities here feel the Jessup-Malik conversations have made considerable prog-

Strife at Antiwar Rally

Anarchists Stage Protest As Compton Speaks in Paris

Paris, April 30 (AP).—A group of youths identified as anarchists almost broke up tonight's session of the Revolutionary Democratic Rally with protests over the atom bomb.

The uproar followed a speech by Dr. Karl T. Compton, chairman of the United States Military Establishment's Research and Development Board and former president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Dr. Compton told the group of Leftists gathered to proclaim a crusade against war and dictatorship that he had participated in President Truman's decision to drop the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Japan.

He had scarcely finished when a number of youths stood up in various sections of the crowd assembled in the Palais des Sports and began shouting. One of the youths exclaimed: "We protest the atom bomb!"

As the tumult increased, groups rushed toward the speakers' platform, and for several minutes the meeting was virtually suspended. Chairman Georges Altman, editor of the left-wing newspaper Franc Tireur, made several efforts to restore order. He finally succeeded by promising both Anarchist and Trotskyite groups they would be permitted to state their positions.

During the uproar, Garry Davis, former U. S. bomber pilot and self-styled world citizen, told the crowd of 10,000 that people of the world have had "enough of hate and enough of fear."

Previously Compton told the gathering President Truman had informed Soviet Prime Minister Stalin at the Potsdam Conference the United States intended to use the atomic bomb if Japan rejected the Potsdam ultimatum.

He said the decision to drop the bomb was to force a quick end to the war and thus save lives and to achieve international control of atomic energy as quickly as possible.

Dr. Compton said atomic experimental power plants should be in operation within a year or two, but warned that the United States will keep atomic weapons secret so long as the Soviet Union refuses to accept the control system proposed by the

Shanghai Near Rail Isolation; Chaos Grows

Night Trains Halted As Peril Increases; Economy Falls Apart

Shanghai, May 1 (AP).—Shanghai's peril mounted today, but indications that it was cut off by rail from the rest of China proved erroneous.

Railway officials announced trains still were running from Shanghai to the supporting city of Hangchow, 121 miles southwest.

They said night trains had been halted, however, and that this led to reports last night no trains were running past Kashing, 62 miles southwest of Shanghai.

At the same time, telephone service ceased to Kunshan, about 35 miles west of Shanghai.

Communist troops in early afternoon had been officially reported by the Shanghai garrison to be 17 miles northwest of Kashing and 23 miles north of the important port of Hangchow, which is 121 miles by rail southwest of Shanghai.

Although thus threatened, this

France Declared Using Aid Funds To Cut U. S. Trade

By the United Press

The commander of the American Legion's Post No. 1 in Morocco yesterday asked the House Appropriations Committee to slash aid-to-Europe funds "to a point that will protect established American enterprise from irreparable damage."

The commander, Robert E. Rodes, said in a letter that American aid has "permitted France to monopolize Moroccan trade."

"French competition," Rodes wrote, "already has used our assistance to decrease America's share of Moroccan business 40 per cent while increasing France's share 90 per cent. American textiles are drastically affected."

U. N. Outvotes Soviet Bloc on Clerics' Trials

34-6 Tally Approves Plan for Settlement Under Peace Treaties

New York, April 30 (AP).—The United Nations Assembly approved today an American-backed plan to attempt settlement under the peace treaties of disputes over the trial of religious leaders behind the Iron Curtain.

The vote was 34 to 6 (Russian bloc) with 9 abstentions.

The Russian bloc fought bitterly at every step of the debate but the West won its argument that the peace treaty machinery should be used first to seek a settlement. The Assembly kept the case before the U. N. until next fall to see what has been done since it acted. The Assembly also appealed to Bulgaria and Hungary to cooperate in reaching a settlement. Bulgaria and Hungary refused an invitation to speak for themselves here.

The battle hinged on the trials and convictions of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary and of 15 Bulgarian Protestant ministers.

The United States has charged that human rights were violated, but the American delegation decided the best course now is to take it up under the peace treaties with Hungary and Bulgaria.

Andrei A. Gromyko, Soviet deputy foreign minister, attacked the West at every turn for backing the case in the U. N. He said the trials are an internal matter and not the business of the U. N.

Sir Alexander Cadogan, British delegate, told the Assembly this morning that Gromyko's arguments are "not rational."

"It is the hounding of men for their political opinions that is the basis of our complaint against the Hungarian and Bulgarian governments," Cadogan said.

Joza Vilfan of Yugoslavia, and V. P. Kovalenko of the Soviet Ukraine, backed Gromyko's arguments today, saying any U. N. action would be a grave interference in the rights of sovereign states.

Barter Theater Is Sponsor

U. S. Actors to Give 'Hamlet' First Time at Danish Festival

By Richard L. Coe

Post Reporter

American actors have been invited to present "Hamlet" at Elsinore, Denmark, for the first time since the international festival was founded, the State Department announced last night.

The State Department and the United States Air Force will cooperate in carrying out the plan jointly as a cultural exchange project and for the benefit of American troops overseas.

The company of 28 is sponsored by the State Theater of Virginia, popularly known as Abingdon's Barter Theater, which in turn is sponsored by ANTA, the American National Theater and Academy.

The Air Force will take the company to Kronberg Castle at Elsinore, setting of Shakespeare's play, for performances from June 17 to 28. The cast will then play before our troops in Germany.

The role of Hamlet will be played by Robert Breen, executive secretary of ANTA, who produced and played the title role for the Barter company last winter.

Clarence Derwent, president of Actors' Equity, will play Polonius. Walter Abel will be Cladius, Aline MacMahon the Queen and Ruth Ford, Ophelia. The remaining roles will be filled by leading players of New York and the State Theater of Virginia, headed by Robert Porterfield.

The Danish National Theater in 1937 instituted the Danish national open air stage to sponsor annual international companies in "Hamlet" at Elsinore.

Byrd Asks Acheson If Secret Arms Vows Were Made

By the United Press

Senator Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.) demanded yesterday that Secretary of State Dean Acheson tell Congress whether any secret promises have been made to supply Atlantic Pact nations with American arms.

He also called on the Administration for a cost estimate on the entire arms-for-Europe program. So far the only figure supplied to Congress has been $1,130,000,000 for the first year.

Byrd's demands for new information came as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee prepared to renew hearings Monday on the 12-nation defense treaty with testimony from former Undersecretary of State Robert A. Lovett.

Carrier Row Held Blow to Unity Bill

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Members of the Senate and House Armed Services Committee said yesterday that the Johnson-Sullivan row over abandonment of the Navy's super aircraft carrier has almost certainly doomed the Administration's unification bill this year.

But they are beginning to wonder whether or not the controversial measure—which would strengthen the powers of the Secretary of Defense—is any longer of much importance.

Has not the new Secretary, Louis Johnson, they ask, stretched the elastic authority of his office to give him the centralized control contemplated under the bill?

The measure—which would amend the original Unification Act now is being whipped into final shape by the Senate committee. Supporters say it will be approved by that body—possibly unanimously—and may pass the Senate this month.

However, even before the cancellation of the carrier, prospects for the bill were poor in the House. Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) has opposed it from the beginning and so has a majority of the committee.

Secretary Johnson's cancellation of the flattop—particularly the way he did it—solidified their feelings and won some converts against the measure.

Navy Secretary John L. Sullivan quit as a result of his action and aimed a blast at his chief, accusing him of being high-handed and arbitrary in the matter and refusing to listen to the Navy's side of the issue.

The day following Sullivan's dramatic exit, Representative George Bates (R., Mass.) demanded that the House committee investigate the whole matter.

Members of Congress, however, now are questioning whether or not the bill any longer has much meaning. It was drafted because former Secretary of Defense James Forrestal felt the original unification act gave him insufficient power to run the National Military Establishment.

Many Pentagon officials, however, believed he had much greater authority than he exercised. They argued that he was the President's deputy for defense matters and that the President also was Commander in Chief of the Army, Navy and Air Force—a position of vast inherent power.

By using this source of authority, these legal authorities reasoned, could not the Defense Secretary take virtual command over the Pentagon and get away with it.

Forrestal never tried this, but Johnson did and succeeded in his first major test—the carrier stop order. What is to now prevent him from going ahead and running the national military establishment as a single department and treating the Departments of Army, Navy and Air Force as mere divisions and their heads as his assistants?

A second contemplated major step—affacting Marine Corps aviation—was blocked by congressional reaction. But meanwhile, the process of centralizing control at the Pentagon goes forward, stimulated by orders consolidating public relations and putting a "gag" on any protests. Is not the new unification bill largely inconsequential?

South Korea Seeks Treaty Of Mutual Defense With U. S.

Seoul, Korea, April 30 (U.P.).—President Syngman Rhee revealed today that this republic has asked the United States for a mutual defense pact and an arms program "sufficient to manatiin South Korea's security."

Sources close to Rhee said talks are now under way in Washington which may lead to such an agreement.

The Washington discussions are part of negotiations on the withdrawal of 8000 United States occupation troops here, the sources said. They said Korea had in mind protection similar to that accorded Greece by the Truman Doctrine.

Rhee said simply that Korea requested "a military agreement for mutual defense in accordance with Mr. Truman's world-wide policies."

Asked what Korea needed most in light of developments in China and the projected withdrawal of American troops from South Korea, he said an "explicit statement of American policy" that she intends to "continue" her "support of Korea's freedom."

"The most important thing is not whether or when American troops will be withdrawn, but what attitude and policies the United States will maintain toward Korea . . . we are concerned about what the United States would do in case Korea is attacked.

'After all," President Rhee said, "the United States agreed to the entrance of Russian troops in North Korea."

June 1 To Mark End of Pacific Air Command

By The Associated Press

The air defense of the Central Pacific will rest entirely on naval and marine aviation after this month. The Air Force announced yesterday that its Pacific Air Command would be terminated on June 1.

That command has shrunk during last two years to a few transport units and one group of about 75 fighter planes. When that group, the eightyfirst, is returned to the mainland, the Air Force will have no tactical units, either fighters or bombers, in the central Pacific.

The nearest major operating base will be at Guam. Other units are based in or operate to Japan, Okinawa and the Philippines.

Navy Shifting Weight

The Navy also has been shifting weight out of the Pacific as the European situation puts new values on Atlantic strategy.

From its wartime peak of hundreds of combat ships, the Navy has cut down its fighting ships in the Pacific to a current total of about 96, with corresponding reductions in naval shore stations.

Of the present fleet, five are aircraft carriers—two 27,000-ton Essex class and three light vessels of 14,500 tons.

It is upon the fighter and attack planes of these five carriers that air defense for the Central Pacific will rest. The five carriers have a total complement of about 300 planes. They are operated by both the Navy and Marine aviation units assigned to the carriers.

In addition, the Pacific fleet now includes six cruisers, 53 destroyers and destroyer escorts and 32 submarines.

Patrol Is Up to Navy

Air patrol of the Central Pacific, to detect any suspicious actions by planes or ships of other nations, now is up to the Navy.

In closing its Pacific Air Command, the Air Force will turn over its transport units in that area to the Military Air Transport Service (MATS), 'the combined Air Force-Navy organization.

Brig. Gen. Robert F. Travis, chief of the Pacific Air Command, will return to the mainland for reassignment.

At the same time, it was announced the 1501st wing of MATS, based at Fairfield-Suisun, Calif., will be discontinued, and the 1500th Air Transport wing organized at Hickam Base, Hawaii. All MATS C-97 transport and about 200 flying and maintenance personnel will be transferred to Hickam to become part of the 1500th wing.

Brig. Gen. Harold Q. Huglin, now commander at Fairfield-Suisun, will transfer to Hickam to become deputy commander of the Pacific division of MATS and wing commander of the 1500th. Rear Admiral W. G. Tomlinson will continue as chief of the Pacific division of MATS.

greatest of Asiatic cities paid almost no attention to the war.

It was preoccupied with a dangerous month-end financial crisis.

The Nationalist "gold" yuan had become so nearly worthless that there were not enough bank notes to pay salaries.

To ease the situation, the garrison ordered the Central Bank to sell 400,000 old Chinese silver dollars to employers at the rate of four million yuan to one dollar. This was less than half the black market rate. It instructed employers to pay "common workers" one silver dollar each on account.

At the same time it announced that the usual month-end cost of living index would not be issued, but the municipal authorities later announced an index anyhow. It was 25 times what it was two weeks ago.

All sorts of makeshift agreements were being made between employers and workers for payment in food or in foreign currencies. It was obvious, however, that many payrolls could not be met.

If this situation worsens, Shanghai may see food riots and looting.

Communist military actions seemed to indicate isolation rather than occupation was intended for Shanghai at present.

The Shanghai garrison's communique said that southwest of Shanghai one Red column had reached Techeng, 23 miles by road north of Hangchow.

The newspaper Sin Wan Pao said artillery fire could be heard in Hangchow and that provincial government employes had been ordered to flee yesterday. It said local militia were policing Hangchow.

These unconfirmed reports might indicate Nationalist troops already had withdrawn from Hangchow. (Hangchow had been long touted as anchor base of a new government defense line to guard south China.)

(The Peiping radio, heard in San Francisco by the Associated Press, broadcast a long official statement demanding that Britain, the United States and France "withdraw quickly their armed forces, warships, military aircraft and Marines, in the Yangtze River" and anywhere else they might be in China.

(The statement, By Gen. Li Tao, military spokesman, bitterly assailed British Prime Minister Clement Attlee over the shooting incident involving the sloop Amethyst and other British warships and reiterated demands that Britain apologize and pay indemnity.

(It ended, however, by offering to consider diplomatic relations with any foreign government that would sever relations with the Nationalists.)

Peron Asks Argentines To Eat Less Meat

Buenos Aires, Argentina, April 30 (U.P.).—President Juan D. Peron told the Argentines today that they eat much more meat than is good for them and that they should eat more fruit, vegetables fish and eggs.

Delivering the inaugural lecture of a series sponsored by the Ministries of Health and Education on "Argentine Food Policy," Peron said Argentina does not have to restrict exports in order to insure its people the best foods it produces.

Burma Strife May Put Off Election Plan

Rangoon, Burma, April 30 (AP). The turmoil of Burma's civil war has brought a recommendation that general elections be postponed, it was reported authoritatively today.

The seven-man commission appointed by the government to investigate the possibility of elections was said to have made the recommendation to President Sao Shwe Thaike.

Burma's constitution provided for elections to be held within 18 months after independence, or by July 4, 1949.

A government communique indicated that a general antirebel offensive may begin in upper Burma, where Karens, Communists, army deserters and White Band People's Volunteer Organization (PVO) units are in revolt.

Government sources said army units had occupied Toungoo, 150 miles north of Rangoon.

Cartels Vanishing, Clay Tells Critics

Frankfurt, Germany, April 30 (AP).—Gen. Lucius D. Clay, replying to criticism by an official investigating committee, asserted today that the "deconcentration of economic enterprise has been accomplished in Germany on a scale without parallel elsewhere."

Clay's statement was made to the Army Department in reply to charges by the committee that American occupation authorities have evaded presidential orders to break up German cartels and monopolies.

"The laws which we have enacted clearly prohibit trade practices which restrain trade and cartel-like formations," the American Military Governor said.

"The number of cartels which have been broken up indicate that this law is being applied. More than 1100 notices of dissolution of cartel arrangements have been recorded. I shall certainly take steps to increase the vigor in application as the commission believes desirable. However, . . . we must expect constant efforts to circumvent the law in Germany.

Clay said Germany's "highly centralized financial system has been destroyed and replaced by a decentralized system quite analogous to our own Federal Reserve System."

"The I. G. Farben enterprise has been broken up into a large number of separate units, of which there are 50 in our zone alone. This was Germany's largest industrial combination."

General Clay said 26 of the larger companies in Germany engaged in steel and coal production have been seized."

The general said deconcentration actions are under way against Bosch (electrical equipment), Degussa (electrical equipment) and metalgesellschaft (metals) companies and the match monopoly.

Clay noted that much of the criticism centers on the Henschel and VKF plants. He said:

"I did not believe that the breaking up of Henschel, the principal locomotive works in Germany, was a wise undertaking in a period in which transportation was almost at a standstill because of the need for repairs to rolling stock, and I am still of this view.

"VKF was one of two bearing plants, the other having been dismantled for reparations purposes. Since it was understood at that time that the production of bearings in Germany would in the future be prohibited, nothing was to be gained by the breaking up of this enterprise."

New Technique

Jamming Gags 'Voice' In USSR

New York, April 30 (NYHT).—Soviet Russia lowered an iron curtain last Sunday on this country's "Voice of America" radio messages beamed to the Russian people. The Russians had been sporadically jamming the State Department's program for many months, but on Sunday they put into operation a total blackout that has the State Department temporarily confounded.

At least 60 powerful transmitters, costing perhaps $500,000 each, are now being used by the Russians to kill listener reception in Russia of the American two-hour program beamed to that country. The transmitters are alerted for 24-hour duty, and they are able to follow any change in wave frequencies within 12 seconds. American radio engineers are amazed at the efficiency of the new Russian jamming techniques.

No counterattack measures have yet been devised, but the State Department is repeating its regular programs 24 hours round the clock in the hope that some small part of it may trickle through to Russian listeners. The department believes that the new jamming program is the result of long and careful preparation, and that the Russians intend to keep it in effect.

The American Government has been broadcasting two programs to Russia, one from 12 transmitters in the northeast part of this country, and the other from seven on the West Coast.

New Records Set For Airlift Tonnage

Berlin, April 30 (AP).—The Berlin airlift today established new monthly and weekly records for tonnages hauled. In 934 flights by British and American planes, 8547.2 tons of supplies were brought in, making the weekly total 60,772.2 tons in comparison with last week's 58,155 tons.

In April the planes brought 235,363.7 tons in 26,026 flights to Berlin. The March total was 196,160.7 tons.

Berlin Talks Near Climax

ress even though neither the Russian nor American Government is yet actually bound to any agreement. That is what is meant by the State Department's repeated insistence that the talks are "exploratory."

The greatest hurdles were crossed in two big policy jumps taken by the Soviet Union. The first of these came Tuesday after Jessup and Malik had been going through their slow-moving diplomatic talk routine for two months.

On Tuesday the Tass News Agency announced Russia was ready to lift the blockade of Berlin provided the Western Allies would simultaneously end their counterblockade of the Soviet zone of Germany and would set a date for a meeting of the four-power Council of Foreign Ministers to reopen talks on all Germany.

The Western powers had always regarded the counterblockade as resulting only from the Soviet action in Berlin. They had always said they were willing to have another foreign ministers meeting once the Berlin blockade was ended. Therefore the Tass statement appeared to Western officials like a Moscow admission of defeat in the battle of Berlin.

It was stated responsibly here that the Soviets were standing firmly by Tuesday's policy announcement; that they have not raised the question of suspending the organization of western Germany, and that the talks have now proceeded to discussion of details.

Such details include a day or period of days for lifting the blockade, a time for the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and comparable matters. These include the wording of whatever public announcement may be made, if and when final agreement on the Berlin situation is reached.

The expectation is that the date for lifting the blockde would be fixed around the middle of May and that the Foreign Ministers—Acheson, Bevin, Schuman and Vishinsky—would gather in Paris about 10 days later.

Nazi Chief's Sentence To Death Confirmed

Berlin, April 30 (U.P.). — Gen. Lucius D. Clay today confirmed the death sentence of Oswald Pohl, SS administrative chief convicted by an American military court at Nuernberg.

The U. S. Military Governor also confirmed prison sentences of 13 other Nazis.

Earlier, James T. Farrell, American author, told the rally the recent Communist-sponsored World Peace Congress had preached "ideological hooliganism." He added the Congress was an attempt to manipulate "deeply felt sentiments for peace and freedom by applying a Soviet variation of Adolf Hitler's technique of the big lie."

Some speakers portrayed the United States and the Soviet Union as equally evil. Jacob de Kadt, a Dutch Socialist, got boos and whistles, as well as some applause, when he defended the Atlantic Treaty.

A message from Jean-Paul Sartre, French philosopher and playwright, Richard Wright, American Negro writer, and Maurice Merleauponty, Existentialist philosopher, declared: "We condemn equally and for the same reasons the more or less open Soviet annexation of eastern Europe, and the Atlantic Pact, which is an avowal of political, social and moral bankruptcy."

The message said: "If the United States wanted to support the cause of peace, it should first declare frankly its determination to end racial oppression within its own borders and promise never to extend to other countries its criminal race theories."

Professor Sidney Hook, of New York University, took issue and challenged the three authors to a public debate.

Yugoslavia Apologizes For Diplomatic Slights

Balgrade, Yugoslavia, April 30 (AP).—Yugoslavia apologized yesterday for discourtesies suffered by diplomats of five Western nations.

The United States, Britain, France, Belgium and Italy protested that their representatives were prevented from performing routine duties and subjected to discourteous treatment by militiamen last Sunday.

Trains Ready In Case Soviet Lifts Blockade

Berlin, April 30 (AP).—Plans were complete to the last detail in western Germany tonight for resumption of traffic to Berlin—just in case of a May Day announcement from Moscow on the blockade.

A Hamburg dispatch said west German railways were ready to start 30 freight trains a day to Berlin. Officials said they could get 20 trainloads of coal to the city within 24 hours after being given the green light.

Heightening optimism, the Russians in this divided city granted three British demands with such cordiality that it represented almost a complete change of attitude.

British officials announced that an officer and three enlisted men arrested by the Russians April 22 while on patrol near the Soviet border at Klein-Zacher, had been returned tonight. The Russians accepted the British demand for their release.

They promised not to interfere again with canal traffic in Britain's sector. They also returned, with an apology, three British military policemen seized yesterday during a raid on a British-occupied farm.

After a British demand for their release had been served, the three were turned loose at a little ceremony 10 yards inside the Soviet zone today.

Bowing and smiling, Soviet Lieut. Col. Suronov told British Lieut. Col. J. F. Corbett the British policemen were well behaved and gave no trouble, but they had been inside the Soviet zone and had to be arrested.

"There's always a big noise around here when something happens," he commented to reporters.

The dispute over barge traffic was settled in a meeting between Brig. E. R. Benson of British headquarters and Gen. P. A. Kvashnin, Soviet transportation chief.

A-Bomb B-29s In Britain For Secret Drills

Lakenheath, England, April 30 (U.P.).—Giant Superfortresses of the United States Air Force's highly-trained 509th Atom Bomb Group began arriving here today from their American base for top-secret maneuvers.

The first six of the group's 30 B-29s touched down at Lakenheath air base early in the afternoon and several others landed at Marham, another Royal Air Force base lent to the Third Air Division of the United States Air Force for training purposes. The rest of the planes were expected by Sunday.

The group is the first with special training for dropping atom bombs to arrive in Europe. The Air Force now is in a position to drop an atom bomb on any target within a range of about 2000 miles of Britain.

The509th, commanded by former West Point football star Col. Jack Ryan, began leaving its home base at Roswell, N. M., two days ago.

U. S. Agent Found Dead

Architecture Latest Soviet Purge Field

London, April 30 (U.P.).—A Communist purge of Russian cultural, scientific and artistic life has shifted to the field of architecture, where "American influences" are under attack, it was disclosed today.

The latest issue of the journal, Soviet Art, published in Moscow discloses that the Soviet Academy of Architecture is being completely reorganized because of what is called the pro-Western, pro-American and general cosmopolitan outlook of leading members.

The journal itself was called "a tribune of slanders against Soviet architecture."

Soviet Art indicated that the main culprit is K. Alabyan, acting vice president of the academy, who was removed from his post.

Soviet Art said the spiritual father of cosmopolitanism in agriculture and of the enthustiasts for "capitalistic architecture" is Moises Gintsburg. Gintsburg blueprinted such monumental Soviet buildings as the state Social Insurance Bureau in Moscow and the Kazakh government building in Alma Ata.

As in other recent purges of "cosmopolitan" influences, the crackdown in architecture is believed in diplomatic circles here to be directed against Jews.

Ministers Meet Tuesday on Europe Union

London, April 30 (AP).—Ten foreign ministers will meet Tuesday to bring their countries into a Council of Europe.

They represent the Brussels Pact powers of Britain, France, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg, plus Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Italy and the Republic of Ireland.

Before them will be a draft statute for the council, in effect a parliament of Europe. The draft was completed here April 12 by a working committee of the 10 countries.

British sources say the foreign ministers are expected to agree speedily to the draft. They also are expected to reach agreement on some points left to them for final decision.

German Bishop Accuses U. S. Of Brutality to Prisoners

Munich, Germany, April 30 (U.P.). Catholic Bishop Hans Meiser today accused United States authorities of using brutality and "religious interference" against inmates of the nearby Landsberg war-crimes prison.

The bishop said he had protested to Gen. Lucius D. Clay against alleged Landsberg abuses as long ago as December 6, but that promises to investigate had so far brought no results.

The American Military Governor said in Frankfurt that he had no recollection of any letters from Bishop Meiser. He said a recent routine inspection of Landsberg prison had shown it to be no better and no worse than other German prisons.

Meiser said that both Catholic and Protestant churchmen had charged American officials of the prison with brutality. He said that chaplains who protested were discharged.

The churchman charged that an Evangelical (Protestant) chaplain named Ekardt was ordered out of the prison when he complained of conditions, Meiser said. He complained that no regular Protestant chaplain is available now at the prison.

Brig. Gen. Clinton A. Pierce, post commander at Augsburg and immediate superior of the Landsberg commandant, said by telephone today that nothing had been found to support Meiser's charges.

Pierce confirmed that Chaplain Ekardt had been "fired," and that the chaplain's residence had been searched and papers and files taken.

Canada Parliament Dissolved for Test

Ottawa, Ontario, April 30 (AP).—The Canadian Parliament was dissolved tonight and new elections called for June 27.

The Parliament could have stayed in office until August, 1950, for its full five-year term. However, Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent, just back from a tour of western Canada, decided the present moment offered the best chance of returning his National Liberal Party to power. The dissolution order was signed by Governor-General Viscount Alexander.

The election may present no clear-cut issues. But it may show in general how the country feels about having as Prime Minister a French Canadian who favors closer trade relations with the United States.

One of the last acts of the House was to ratify the North Atlantic Treaty, 185 to 0.

Canada thus became the first country to ratify the pact, St. Laurent said.

Both the Liberals and their chief opposition, the Progressive Conservatives, go into the campaign with new leaders.

St. Laurent was chosen Liberal Party leader at a convention last August to succeed the retiring W. L. McKenzie King. Under the Canadian political system, the leader of the majority party automatically becomes prime minister. The country, therefore, has not expressed its opinion of St. Laurent by popular vote.

St. Laurent is a 67-year-old corporation lawyer, the son of a French-speaking father and Irish mother.

The Conservatives also have a new leader, George Drew, handsome 54-year-old former premier of Ontario.

The Conservatives had 69 seats in the old House of Commons.

The Liberals had a slim margin in the House—125 seats out of a total of 245. They have been in power since 1935.

The new House will have 262 seats.

Canada elects only the House of Commons. Senators are chosen for life by the government.

Job Questionnaire

U. N. Woman Subpenaed In Spy Hunt

By the United Press

House spy hunters have subpenaed a woman employe of the United Nations in an attempt to find out how unwanted Federal workers get on U. N. payrolls, it was learned last night.

Members of the House Committee on Un-American Activities have expressed belief that former Federal workers whose loyalty has been questioned have an easy time getting jobs with international agencies.

Object of the inquiry is to see whether Russia has opened a pipeline to such jobs for Communists or persons sympathetic to the Kremlin.

The woman under subpena used to work for the Foreign Economic Administration and the Allied Reparations Commission. The committee also has subpenaed a man who used to work for several agencies, including the Army.

Names of both prospective witnesses were withheld. But a House source said both recently tried to get passports for France and were turned down by the State Department. He noted that a Communist-influenced "peace congress" was held in Paris.

Senator Mundt (R., S. Dak.) has demanded that Congress investigate whether Russia is using the United Nations as a vehicle to get spies into this country.

Mundt's complaint was based largely on the incident involving Valentin Gubitchev, Russian U. N. employe who was arrested by the FBI in New York and accused of conspiring with Julith Coplon, Justice Department worker, to steal official documents.

Miss Coplon is being tried on an espionage charge here. She and Gubitchev are scheduled to be tried on the conspiracy charge in New York later.

Danes Invite American Actors

Leigh and members of the Old Vic company of England began the series that year. The series was interrupted for six years during the war. Other companies that have played at Elsinore on invitation of the Danish government include groups from Norway, Germany, Finland and a second from England, headed by John Gielgud.

Chartered by Congress in 1935, ANTA this year received the invitation for the first appearance of an American company, turning to the Nation's only State-sponsored acting company, Virginia's Barter, for the backbone of its players.

Services Combined

By choosing such leading American actors as Derwent, Miss MacMahon, Miss Ford and Abel to appear with Breen, ANTA has effectively combined the services of State-sponsored and Broadway players.

Both the invitation and its acceptance mark the first time the American theater has been recognized by the American Government as an instrument of cultural relations, a practice long accepted by other leading nations of the world.

By its part in bringing the production to troops overseas, the Air Force for the first time recognizes the more serious aspects of the American theater. Previously it has been concerned with bringing comedy and glamour to our forces. Bob Hope, the "Take It or Leave It" radio program and Constance Bennett in a company of "Over 21" have been recent contributions, all laudable but purely light-hearted ventures.

(Katharine Cornell's celbrated wartime tour in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" was made under auspices of the American Theater Wing, while Maurice Evans' "G. I. Hamlet" was a project he put through as commanding officer of an Army Special Service company.)

Blevins Davis of the ANTA board of directors has taken over the producer's responsibility and given the project considerable financial backing.

Friend of President

Born in Independence, Mo., a close personal friend of the President and a man of independent means, Davis has been untiring in clearing the way for this project, unique in American theatrical and governmental history. For some years education program chief of the National Broadcasting Co., he instituted the "Great Plays" series for NBC covered the coronation in 1937 and returned to the network briefly two years ago to represent it at Princess Elizabeth's wedding.

Recently Davis has devoted his energies to the theater, acting as producer and as a representative of ANTA for its special activities across the country. He recently presented Jane Cowl in "Elizabeth the Queen" at civic theaters in Texas, Florida and California.

With funds supplied by Davis, Nat Karson, former stage manager of the Radio City Music Hall, has just made a trip to Denmark to plan settings and costumes for the June production. Karson will return to Denmark with the company as a technical adviser.

Israeli Bid for Membership In U. N. Suffers Setback

New York, April 30 (AP).—Israel suffered a minor setback in her appeal for United Nations membership today. But Israeli officials are still hopeful the application will be approved before the end of the spring U. N. session.

The Assembly had been scheduled to act today on a United States proposal to take Israel's bid from the Political Committee, where it has been sidetracked for two weeks. The U. S. asked that hearings begin early next week before the Assembly's Special Political Committee.

In a last-minute change of plans, however, Assembly President H. V. Evatt said Assembly action on the speedup proposal would be deferred until Monday.

Arab Group Arrives For Lausanne Talks

Lausanne, Switzerland, April 30 (U.P.).—An eight-man delegation from Trans-Jordan, headed by Defense Minister Fauzi Pasha Mulki, arrived here today to take part in preliminary peace talks with three other Arab states and Israel.

The Trans-Jordan representatives will meet Monday with members of the United Nations Palestine Conciliation Commission. The commission already has consulted here with the delegations of Egypt, Syria and Lebanon.

Britain and Israel Set Financial Talks

London, April 30 (U.P.).—Top-ranking Israeli financial and trade experts will begin talks with the British government Monday on the financial liquidation of the Palestine mandate.

The mandate ended last May but Britain did not hand over assets, liabilities and property. This will be done in part at the British Treasury and in part at more detailed talks at Tel Aviv.

Apology Demanded Of Islands Governor

Saint Thomas, Virgin Islands, April 20 (U.P.).—Members of the municipal council demanded today that Governor William Henry Hastie apologize for walking out angrily from a conference with them and slamming the door.

The governor walked out of a conference Tuesday night after Councilman Oswald Harris charged the U. S. Interior Department with neglecting to protect the interests of the Virgin Islands.

West Europe's Employment Above Prewar

Paris, April 30 (U.P.).—Employment in most of the Marshall Plan nations of western Europe is now higher than before the war, the Economic Cooperation Administration reported today.

The ECA report said the average worker now gets nearly as much food as he did 10 years ago.

The report estimated unemployment in the United Kingdom at less than 25 per cent of the 1938 total of nearly 1,800,000. Austria and Sweden were said to have cut their unemployment to one third of the prewar figure.

The report listed Germany, Greece, Italy and Belgium as exceptions in the generally improved trend of western Europe.

Rain Eases Drought In Most of Europe

Paris, April 30 (AP).—April showers have brought some relief to drought-stricken areas of Europe, but farmers still are worried.

A Marshall Plan report says, "With abundant rains in the next six weeks excellent crops will be possible, but with continued subnormal rainfall the results will be extremely serious."

Navy Veteran Complains U. S. Won't Admit Bride

London, April 30 (AP).—A Navy veteran accused the United States tonight of violating the United Nations code of human rights by barring his British Communist bride from America.

John A. Wolfard, 38, former VA Navy Lieutenant, wrote the American Embassy here:

"It is my contention that a persistence in the refusal to grant my wife a visa would be a violation of the whole spirit of the declaration of human rights."

Wolfard, former associate professor of economics at the University of Utah and the University of Montana, met his wife in England last summer.

Wolfard said he looked into the human rights declaration after reading reports of U. N. debates on Russia's refusal to permit wives of Westerners to leave Russia.

"If Western delegates contend Russia violates the human rights declaration by not letting Russian wives go to Western countries," he asked a reporter, "why won't the United States let my British wife in?"

Wolfard said his wife was a member of the British Communist Party. He wrote the embassy, however, that she never has advocated use of violence to overthrow the United States Government.

By The Associated Press

Communists and left-wing labor groups all over the world will hold traditional May Day celebrations today, but they face considerable competition from anti-Communist groups.

In the United States, demonstrations were staged yesterday in some cities, while others will have them today. "Loyalty day" parades far outnumber left-wing celebrations in this country.

In Europe and other sectors abroad, the observance generally will be on May 1, which was designated as an international labor holiday by an international Socialist congress in 1889.

New York loyalty paraders, led by Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin, Francis Cardinal Spellman and James A. Farley, stepped down Fifth Avenue.

On the west side of Manhattan, left-wing groups marched down Eighth Avenue in a "May Day" parade, one of whose themes was a demand for "a peace pact with the Soviet Union instead of the Atlantic war alliance."

This parade wound up in Union Square with the participants taking a pledge that included:

"We declare our loyalty to our Nation, to our people and to our great democratic institutions.

"In the spirit and ideals of our great leaders . . ., we pledge . . . to continue the struggle for the camplete destruction of fascist barbarism everywhere in the world, so that our people and all peoples can prosper in a world of security and peace."

The loyalty demonstrations were originated in New York by the Veterans of Foreign Wars in 1946 to counter the left-wing parades.

Army Personnel Barred From May Day Parades

Regular Army personnel has been instructed not to participate in any type of parades in connection with May Day demonstrations, an Army spokesman said yesterday.

Purpose of the order is to prevent military personnel from becoming involved in clashes between Communist and anti-Communist demonstrators.

At one Communist rally yesterday at New Haven, Conn., a series of fights brought out every police squad car in the city and four speakers were arrested for inciting a riot.

Police said a woman speaker started the fighting when she kicked a bystander who was heckling another speaker.

Vice President Barkley will speak today at a Polo Grounds rally in New York sponsored by the Roman Catholic archdiocese to pray for peace and protest, injustices of "God-hating Communists."

Also on today's program is a New Orleans anti-Communist rally at which Catholics will pray for conversion of Russia and suppression of atheism throughout the world, and for preservation of the United States from communistic influence.

Loyalty celebrations are planned for today as well in New Jersey and Los Angeles, Calif.

In Detroit, Henry A. Wallace is to speak at an afternoon Progressive Party meeting. Detroit Catholics will hold a special service Monday to pray for Russia and her people under Communist domination.

In Russia, Moscow's Red Square will be the scene of the traditional parade and display of military power, followed by a mass meeting with speeches.

Gen. Charles de Gaulle has called for a rally of his followers in Paris to counter the demonstration by the Communists.

There will be no parading in London because of a ban on political processions after antifascist riots. But Communists will meet in Trafalgar Square and the Labor Party will have rallies throughout England.

Communists plan to march through the British and French sectors of Berlin and stage a big demonstration in the Soviet zone. They have been barred from parading in the United States zone.

Labor Compromise Planned by Jacobs

By The Associated Press

A new three-step compromise for handling national emergency strikes was offered yesterday as the House took a weekend breather in its furious labor bill debate.

A board hearing, a presidential order and, if necessary, resort to the courts are included in the proposal advanced by a freshman Congressman who has figured actively in the legislative battle.

The lawmaker, Representative Jacobs (D., Ind.), a House Labor Committee member and a supporter of the Administration's labor bill, told reporters he had discussed the plan with Democratic leaders and the bill's sponsor, Labor Committee Chairman Lesinski (D., Mich.).

Wood Bill Now at Issue

The compromise would include salient features of both the Lesinski bill and the substitute bill by Representative Wood (D., Ga.), which is backed by Republicans and Southern Democrats.

The Wood bill is the present issue before the House.

With the House labor debate in recess until Tuesday, leaders on both the Democratic and Republican sides of the aisle were issuing claims of victory. However, each side said the issue would be decided by a narrow margin.

Jacobs, a former labor lawyer and an energetic participant in the House debate, proposed that when any labor dispute threatens the national health or safety, the President appoint a fact-finding board to go to work at once.

The board would decide what percentage of the industry would have to remain in operation for the public's protection, and the rest of the industry would be allowed to go on strike.

The board would report to the President, recommending terms to propose for settlement, and what percentage of the threatened industry it decided would have to remain in operation for the public's welfare.

The President then could modify any of the board's recommendations, reject them completely—or accept them and issue a proclamation ordering into effect that part stating what percentage of the industry should continue to operate.

Courts Would Be Used

"My purpose," said Jacobs, "is to avoid compulsory arbitration in these disputes, and I think that is what Congress is trying to avoid."

If either party refused to abide by the President's proclamation for maintaining part of the operations, Jacobs said, the Attorney General would ask for a Federal Court order compelling compliance. The court could review the President's order and could overturn it if it was not based on substantial evidence.

But the court also could issue a decree backing up the order, with a jail penalty for anyone refusing to abide by it.

The Wood bill would continue in effect the present law's provisions for 80-day injunctions to enforce a cooling-off period in national emergency disputes. This procedure has been used several times.

The Lesinski measure, however, does not provide for injunctions.

Jacobs said he will offer his plan as an amendment to the Lesinski bill when the House resumes its labor debate. The Senate will not take up the labor issue until the House acts.

As Jacobs made his proposal public, administration supporters were trying to round up enough votes to sink the Wood bill. It would repeal the Taft-Hartley law in name, but retain most of the act's provisions.

The Lesinski-bill would replace the present law with an expanded Wagner Act including changes suggested by President Truman.

Agreement Reported On Labor Amendments

Houston, Tex., April 30 (AP).—An agreement was reached Wednesday at an all-night meeting of AFL and CIO officials with Administration leaders in Congress to accept three vital amendments to the Lesinski labor bill, the Houston Chronicle said today.

President Truman attended the meeting during the early part of the evening, the Chronicle said.

Robert C. Tucker, chairman of the Harris County Democratic Executive Committee, reported today on his return from Washington that he attended the meeting. He declared the decisions reached there will be presented to Congress by Speaker Rayburn when the House reconvenes Tuesday, the Chonicle said.

Tucker refused either to confirm or deny that President Truman attended the conference, the newspaper said.

The amendments which the labor leaders and Democratic congressional leaders agreed to accept, according to Tucker, are:

Grant the President power to halt strikes by court injunction in the interest of public welfare.

Require union officials to sign pledges that they are not members of the Communist Party.

Require unions to issue financial statements.

Tucker said, after the agreement had been reached between the top union officials and the Congressmen, the union heads called their official membership in Washington into meeting at 9 a. m. Thursday. Both the AFL and CIO groups approved the agreement, according to Tucker.

Speaker Rayburn and House Majority Leader McCormack (D., Mass.) attended the night meeting, Tucker said.

Tucker said Administration congressional leaders are confident the compromise agreement will be accepted and passed in the House.

Aida Silenced In Pay Dispute

quently showed excellent performance.

Reed, widely-known for his singing in Carmen Jones, makes an excellent Rhadames. In looks and voice he is well-suited to the part.

Muriel Rahn is an equally brilliant Aida. Her voice handles every demand of the part with ease. She understands every mood and phrase. She too is remembered for her singing in Billy Rose's version of Carmen but that would not prepare anyone for her outstanding work last night.

Jackson Smith and Robert McFerron were top-grade as the high priest and the captive king. The chorus and ballet of the company handle themselves with professional finish.

Despite all these excellent circumstances, the performance was a disappointment. Uriel Nespoli stood on the conductor's platform.

The Armory, a better place for opera than Constitution Hall, heard plenty of applause. Greater care in planning the staging and an adequate conductor will make future presentations of this company welcome.

Britain Seizes Gas Industry

London, April 30 (AP).—Britain's billion-dollar gas industry passes into the hands of the government Sunday, socialism's international May Day holiday.

It is the sveenth major industry nationalized by the Labor Party since it came to power in 1945. the others were coal, electricity, inland transport, cable and wireless, airways and the Bank of England.

When dusk falls Sunday, lamplighters as usual will pedal furiously down British streets on their bicycles, lighting the gas lamps. However, they will draw their pay henceforth from the state instead of from a gas company.

The government will take over 130,000 employes, 1046 enterprises owned by 771 private companies and 275 municipalities and valued at $1,060,000,000.

The immediate change is largely administrative. A gas council will take over supervision. It will be responsible to the Minister of Fuel and Power.

Ford Row Still On

Shutdown Threat Eases At Hudson

Detroit, April 30 (AP).—The threat of a prolonged Hudson shutdown was eased today but a Ford dispute involving 60,000 workers lingered on.

However, a layoff of at least some of 25,000 Hudson Motor Car Co. employes early next week was a probability despite the removal of the company's brake dies from the strikebound Bendix products plant at South Bend, Ind., under a Federal court injunction.

Kaiser-Frazer, one of three auto firms closed by the Bendix strike, removed its brake dies from the plant later in the day at the invitation of the United Auto Workers.

Federal mediators, meanwhile, renewed their efforts to settle the crippling supplier strike.

Ford and the CIO United Auto Workers will resume talks Monday aimed at heading off a mass walkout at the company's main Rouge plant.

These conferences and an international union investigation of local union speed-up charges will determine whether a Rouge plant strike will be sanctioned by the UAW.

An unauthorized walkout developed when top UAW officials arrived at the plant for their inquiry Friday. Ford then was forced to shut down its final assembly line and send 1500 workers home for the weekend.

Today UAW President Walter Reuther and other officers sought to explain the purpose of the investigation at a mass meeting of workers from the plant's "B" building, scene of the disputed assembly lines. But only about 175 of the building's 3000 employes attended.

U. S. Mediator Enters Radio Wage Dispute

New York, April 30 (Special).—A Federal mediator today was seeking to break the deadlock in contract negotiations involving approximately 1000 radio and television engineers employed by the National Broadcasting Company, American Broadcasting Company and Station WOR.

The contract with the National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians, an independent labor organization, expires at midnight. Negotiations over a union demand for a 15 per cent increase in pay plus changes in working conditions have been under way since April 4.

Should a walkout develop, the Washington, D. C., outlets of NBC—Radio Station WRC and Television Station WRC—owned and operated by the network—would be directly affected. The two NBC stations employ 55 engineers.

Farm Unions Held Immune From Taft Act

By the United Press

Trial Examiner A. Bruce Hunt of the National Labor Relations Board yesterday ruled that the Government cannot prosecute a union for unfair labor practices if the organization's members are not employees as defined by the Taft-Hartley Law.

In the first ruling of its kind, Hunt gave complete exemption from the punitive provisions of the law to unions of agricultural workers, supervisors and others who are not employees entitled to protection of the act.

Decision Made on Farm Strike

He made the decision in the 19-month-old strike of farm workers at the Di Giorgio Fruit Corp., Bakersfield, Calif., which has received the nation-wide backing of other AFL and CIO unions.

Hunt also criticized the "bootstrap arguments" of the Labor Board's General Counsel, Robert N. Denham. Denham denied the striking National Farm Labor Union (AFL) the right to file unfair charges against Di Giorgio because its members have no rights under the law.

Nevertheless, Denham obtained from Federal Judge Pierson M. Hall in Los Angeles an injunction against the union for picketing which Denham said constituted a secondary boycott outlawed by the Taft-Hartley Act.

Hunt said that if the union could not violate other sections of the law because it had no standing under the Taft-Hartley Act, then it could not violate the secondary boycott ban.

Orders Charges Dismissed

He ruled, in effect, that since unions representing farm workers are denied the protection of the Taft-Hartley law they are not subject to its penalties.

Hunt ordered charges dismissed against the Kern County Farm Labor Union, Local 218, and against the Teamsters' Union, Local 87. He ruled that neither the farm hands, represented by the farm union, nor the drivers, represented by the teamsters, qualified as "employes' under the Taft-Hartley law.

That act states that "employes" who participate in a "labor organization" do not include "any individual employed as an agricultural laborer."

King Is Improved

London, April 30 (AP).—King George's brother, the Duke of Gloucester, said today the condition of the ailing monarch is "definitely encouraging."

CIO Economists Warn of Nation's Need for Buying Power

By The Associated Press

CIO economists said yesterday that "a precipitous drop into depression does not appear iminent" but the country risks "national disaster" unless purchasing power is increased.

In Economic Outlook, a monthly CIO publication, they called upon business leaders to "work cooperatively" with labor, agriculture and the Government to keep employment and production high.

The publication deplored what it called the tendency to "let nature take its course."

It didn't specifically demand wage raises, but it hammered hard on the theme of the "growing inadequacy of consumer purchasing power."

The publication stated that "while consumers' prices have dropped only 2.9 per cent since last September's peak, employment and production have been falling continuously and at a faster rate."

April's End Signals No Business Bust

By The Associated Press

April, supposedly the signpost month for 1949 business, made an orderly withdrawal yesterday with no dire threat of another inflationary whirl or an impending bust.

A top Washington economist sized it up this way:

"Maybe, after all, we can decelerate the postwar boom without falling on our face. It should be a pretty good year."

Approximately such a picture, it was understood, will be presented to President Truman this week when the President's Council of Economic Advisers takes its monthly report to the White House.

Credit Loosened Up

The Government's actions — which sometimes speak louder than its words and figures—added up in April to a concerted effort to fight deflation and bolster public buying power in one of the few ways available—loosening up on credit.

Except for a steadying in farm and food products, the price drift was gently down. Industrial production probably dipped a little further, after four previous consecutive months of decline.

The latter trend has been coupled with fewer factory jobs and shorter work weeks. Total employment in April probably will be found to have risen, however, because of seasonal gains in agriculture and building activity. April reports on workers' earnings were not in.

Retail business in March and April, insofar as it is reflected by department store sales, was slightly below record-breaking 1948, Federal Reserve Board officials say. Exact comparison is difficult because the pre-Easter buying came in March last year, and in April this year.

Construction Report

April construction activity appears to have been "not as far behind 1948 as some people feared," one official said. He did not supply figures or tell what "some people" had feared.

Living costs were found to have edged up slightly in March, on the strength of rallying food prices. Average wholesale prices have continued to decline.

Business loans dropped for the fourteenth straight week. This indicated caution on the part of both lenders and borrowers. Businessmen report slightly more conservative spending plans for plant and equipment, and manufacturers' inventories were found t ohave taken in March their first sizable dip since the war.

In every case of decline, it was emphasized that the drops from 1948 are from economic levels which far surpassed anything in the Nation's history. The index-watchers say the declines have far to go before the country might pass from "prosperity" to "recession."

Family Week Begins Today

National Family Week will be observed this week with various programs under the sponsorship of the Interfaith Committee, representing Jews, Catholics and Protestants.

President Truman has indorsed the observance, saying he hoped it would "focus the attention of all our people upon the home as the basic unit of our national life."

The measure of man's achievement, he said, has been marked by the development of the family unit.

Allegheny Ludlum Elects 2 V. Presidents

Pittsburgh, April 30 (AP).—Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp. today announced election of two vice presidents.

Carl P. Pollock, was elected vice president in charge of production, and Emil Kern, chief engineer, was elected to a newly created vice presidency.

Man Held for Jury For 'Indecent Act' On Daughter, 6

Charles Garris, 29-year-old laborer, was ordered held yesterday under $10,000 bond on a charge of committing an indecent act on his 6-year-old daughter while she was abed with chickenpox.

Judge Aubrey B. Fennell of Municipal Court set the high bond and continued the case for hearing May 14. Garris resides at 1732 Corcoran st. nw.

Garris' wife was at work at the time of the alleged offense Friday. On her return home, police said, the child related what had happened and confronted her father. The mother then called police.

According to police, the defendant's brother, David Garris, 20, on April 5 was sentenced in District Court to serve 5 to 15 years for housebreaking, assault with a knife, and assault with intent to commit an indecent sex act on a 27-year-old former Wave lieutenant who fought him off after he had cut her.

Brewster Urges Dewey to Stay in Politics

By The Associated Press

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey yesterday got what amounted to an invitation from Washington Republicans to run for the Senate in New York next fall.

Commenting on Albany reports that the defeated GOP presidential candidate hasn't given up the idea of staying in politics, Chairman Brewster (R., Me.) of the Republican senatorial campaign committee told a reporter:

"I hope Governor Dewey will stay in public life. He might perhaps consider making the Senate race. We would regret his retirement from active politics."

Dewey Himself Is Silent

Dewey himself hasn't said anything that indicates he might be a candidate either for the seat Senator Wagner (D., N. Y.) is expected to resign in the next few months or for a third term as Governor.

But Dewey's friends have indicated strongly that the Governor still is looking the field over and has not made up his mind to go back to private law practice, as many supposed here.

Off for a six-weeks tour of Europe next Thursday, Dewey may have to make up his mind about the Senate race in July.

Wagner Seat Might Be at Stake

If Wagner, ill for months, should resign before July 8, as many here think he will, his seat would be at stake in the November election. If, the resignation should come after that date, Dewey could appoint a successor to serve until the end of Wagner's term in 1951.

The New York Governor is represented in some quarters as a possible bidder for a third presidential nomination in 1952.

But Republicans who have been touring the country since the election say Dewey is being blamed widely within their ranks for losing last year's election and there is little noticeable support for a third try.

Virginia Held Slow On Negroes' Rights

Charlottesville, Va., April 30 (AP).—Virginia social science educators today weighed the progress of the Virginia Negro toward the attainment of civil rights and found it wanting.

Professors from all the State's liberal arts colleges came to the University of Virginia here for the twenty-second annual meeting of the Virginia Social Science Association.

Dr. Allen W. Moger of Washington and Lee University's history department, said the problem of civil rights is one "which presses for consideration and alleviation, if not for solution." Dr. Moger, president of the association, noted the "great power of conservatism in Virginia politics since 1870" as a deterrent to the evolution of civil rights for Negroes in the State.

Lorin A. Thompson, director of the University of Virginia's bureau of population and economic research, said that income, farm ownership, urban property ownership, and rents of Negroes are about one-half those of whites in the State. What he termed the inferior status of the Negro he said was due to his occupations—occupations in which he engaged "neither by choice nor necessity."

Thompson said educational facilities for Negroes "are as yet hardly equal." The gap between the levels of Negro and white education would largely disappear in another decade if present progress in this field continues, he said.

"If the Negro is prevented from engaging in any pursuit for which he is qualified, then the Nation not only will lose much of the contribution which the Negro can make to its economy, but will abrogate the rights of the Negro as a citizen in a free society," declared Thompson.

A Negro educator, Luther Jackson, of Virginia State College for Negroes in Petersburg, blamed the "lethargy" of his own race for what he called the slow rate of progress toward civil rights.

As for the Negro's progress in Virginia, Charles W. Turner, associate professor of history at Washington and Lee, called the election of a Negro, Oliver W. Hill, to the Richmond City Council "the most significant single advance" in the history of Virginia's racial problems.

17-Vote Margin

D. C. Junior Heads Council At GWU

Charles F. Crichton, 21-year-old junior from Washington, was elected president of the George Washington University Student Council by a margin of 17 votes, it was announced yesterday.

Even closer was the election for vice president, won by Leonard Kirsten by six votes. More than 1600 ballots were cast.

Yesterday's tabulation of the Thursday-Friday voting was announced by Charles Lilien, outgoing Student Council advocate, as follows:

For vice president: Kirsten, 570; Frank O'Brien, 564, and Harry Croswell, 462.

Other winners were:

Secretary, Lynn Clark; activities director, George Fleetwood; program director, Leonard Grant; publicity director, John Donaldson; advocate, Martin Kirsch; freshman director, Joseph Barish, and member at large, Arthur Cerra.

The new president, who lives at 1909 H st. nw., is a graduate of Wilson High School. His activities at George Washington include the presidency of Delta Pau Delta Fraternity. Barkley Predicts National Health Bill Will Pass Front Royal, Va., April 30 (AP). Congress will pass a national health bill, Vice President Alben W. Barkley predicted today in an address launching a drive by the Front Royal-Warren County Recreation Association here for $16,500.

"Government can't do everything," said Barkley, but he thought a national health bill would pass Congress as recognition of the inability of all Americans to provide adequate health measures for themselves.

Addressing 4000 people at the courthouse, Barkley got in a word for the Marshall Plan.

"The United States is undertaking to improve the condition of nations and of the world—something that others have not done—to preserve the liberty of men everywhere and to guarantee the liberty and safety of our own people by spending from 4 to 6 billions of dollars annually. If this is a selfish motive, it is justified selfishness," Barkley said.

America Is Full Of Warmongers, Wallace Says

Cleveland, April 30 (AP).—Henry A. Wallace said tonight "there are more warmongers in the United States than in any nation in the world."

The former presidential candidate for the Progressive Party addressed a rally at the Music Hall. He asserted "certain small groups are stirring up an anti-Communist campaign, an anti-Russian, and anti-Comintern campaign in very much the same spirit which animated the cohorts of Hitler and Mussolini."

Wallace said: "I do not condone what may have been done by the Communists or any other group looking toward the violent overthrow of the U. S. Government, but I do say that the imminent danger is from the right, not from the left."

Physician to Gandhi Speaks Here Tonight

Under the auspices of the United Nations, Dr. Nayyar is making a survey of child care techniques in this country for adaptation for use in India.

Georgia Mental Hospital Placed Under New Head

Atlanta, April 30 (AP).—Georgia took one of the Nation's largest mental hospitals out from under a doctor today and placed it under a business administrator.

Thomas A. Dechman, a veteran Federal official in the South, was appointed superintendent of Milledgeville State Hospital as one step in a reform program.

A recent legislative investigating committee found almost 10,000 patients at the institution with only nine able-bodied doctors. Facilities were described as woefully inadequate. Dechman has been a deputy regional director here for the War Assets Administration. Before that he was regional director in charge of the Charlotte, N. C., office in 1946 and 1947.

Dr. Thomas G. Peacock, former superintendent, will continue to head the medical staff.

While in residence at Beruit, students will make two and three day trips to villages and historic sites. Study will focus on the life and culture of the Near East.

Participating with Wilson Teachers College in sponsoring the seminar are Western Michigan College of Education, Kalamazoo, Mich; State Teachers College, Oneonta, N. Y., and American University of Beirut.

Six hours of graduate training or eight hours of undergraduate training will be given for the course.

Miss Augusta Kriener of the Wilson teaching staff will be a member of the seminar faculty.

McCarran Warns U. S. to Watch Reds in China

The peoples of America were urged last night by Senato Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), to turn their eyes from Berlin to Asia where "Red hordes from the north are driving democracy out of China."

McCarran spoke at a dinner of Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity in the Statler Hotel, when he was inducted into honorary membership.

"We should not be blinded by the lifting of the blockade," he said. "If we lose now, there is no such thing as depicting the slavery which will be visited upon the freedom we have known."

Civilization is resting on the shoulders of American citizens, he declared, and "if we lower our arms only God can say when civilization will come to the surface again."

Gallinger Asked For Reserve Unit

Officials of Gallinger Hospital have been asked by the Department of the Army to organize a reserve field or station hospital unit made up of key personnel for use in event of an emergency.

The unit members would attend biweekly lectures and discussions and be eligible for active duty several weeks each year.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer, said he is opposed to the proposal because "we can't afford to strip an already understaffed group" for the study sessions and active duty periods.

Security Program Shoots at Moon Wherry Declares

Washington, Pa., April 30 (U.P.).—Senate Republican leader Kenneth S. Wherry said tonight that President Truman is really shooting at the moon with his "Fair Deal" social security program.

The Nebraskan said the money needed for Mr. Truman's program over a 50-year period would make seven stacks of silver dollars reaching to the moon, with enough left over to pay the national debt.

"We are witnessing the biggest give-away show on earth," he said. "Come one, come all. Something for nothing—absolutely free."

Wherry spoke at a testimonial dinner tendered for Senator Edward P. Martin (R., Pa.) by Martin's friends in Green and Washington Counties.

He said the 50-year-cost of Mr. Truman's program would be "one trillion, 250 billion dollars." The trillion, he said, would make seven silver-dollar ladders to the moon, and the 250 billion dollars would take care of the Federal debt.

Artificial Kidney Saves Lives In Uremic Poisoning

Baltimore, April 30 (AP).—A "mechanical kidney" which takes blood from the body, filters it, and then returns it purified, is saving lives of uremic poisoning sufferers, the Baltimore Medical Society was told last night.

Dr. D. W. Gordon Murray, University of Toronto, and Dr. George E. Slotkin, University of Buffalo, said the machine is sometimes used in cases of stoppages of the real kidney.

They said it would prove valuable in stoppages from eclampsia during pregnancy, shock, battle wounds, excessive sulfa drug use and heat stroke.

Wallace, Dennis Invited to Oppose Pact at Hearing

By the United Press

Henry A. Wallace and Eugene Dennis, secretary-general of the Communist Party, yesterday were invited to be the first "opposition" witnesses at the Senate hearings on the Atlantic Pact.

Chairman Tom Connally (D., Tex.), of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said he would like to hear from Wallace and Dennis after supporters of the treaty finish testifying, probably this week.

"I want them to head up the opposition," he said.

Dennis is one of 11 Communist leaders now on trial in New York on charges of conspiracy to overthrow the government.

Connally said he expects to wind up the "pro" side of the hearings this week with testimony from former Undersecretary of State Robert A. Lovett, Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Army Chief of Staff; former Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson; retired Supreme Court Justice Owen Roberts, and a few others.

Trade Board Backs J. Russell Young

desirable that, notwithstanding the general policy of this organization to refrain from making recommendations with respect to specific persons for apointment to public office, this present situation requires clarification and the board of directors of the Washington Board of Trade, being cognizant of the long and satisfactory service rendered by Commissioner Young, and believing that an organization of its long history and standing in the community should take a position in this pressing issue:

"NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED by the board of directors of the Washington Board of Trade, in meeting assembled, that unqualified indorsement is hereby given to Hon. John Russell Young for his splendid service for approximately nine years as a Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and he is hereby recommended to the President of the United States for reappointment to that office."

Other officers chosen yesterday are: first vice persident, Thornton W. Owen, proprietor of Thomas J. Owen and Son, real estate auctioneers and appraisers; second vice president, Thomas J. Groom, president of the Bank of Commerce and Savings; secretary, E. D. Merril, president of Capital Transit Co.; treasurer, James A. Cassidy, proprietor of James A. Cassidy, building products; assistant treasurer, Harry L. Merrick, first vice president of Kal, Ehrlich and Merrick Advertising Agency; general counsel, Edward F. Colladay, senior member of law firm of Colladay, Colladay and Wallace.

The following officers were reappointed: William H. Press as executive secretary; Clarence A. Arata. assistant executive secretary; Frank A. Strunk, sergeant at arms.

Siddons Is D. C. Native

The board's new president, Siddons, is a native Washingtonian, and has been on the staff of the American Security & Trust Co. since 1920, when he joined the firm's new business and credit department. He was elected assistant secretary of the company in 1924; secretary in 1927, and vice president and secretary in 1941.

A former chairman of the board of trustees, and now a director of the Better Business Bureau here, Siddons is also active in the following organizations: Treasurer of the National University Alumni Association, member board of trustees and executive committee of National University; treasurer of the Washington Self-Help Exchange; trustee Glenwood Cemetery; chairman of finance committee of American Association for the Advancement of Science from 1939; treasurer, D. C. Chapter American Red Cross; treasurer D. C. Division of American Cancer Society; member Newcomen Society of England, assistant treasurer American Automobile Association, member board of governors, Chevy Chase Club; former assistant treasurer Community War Fund and member of the board. Honorary member Princeton Club of Washington.

He lives at 5905 33d st. nw. with his wife and one child.

Col. Johnson's Name Suggested

Col. Campbell Johnson, a native Washingtonian long active in civic affairs, yesterday was suggested for District Commissioner by Americans for Democratic Action.

In a letter to President Truman, Benjamin C. Sigal, president of the Washington chapter, declared "there are few men in Washington as well fitted for that post as this one of its sons who has spent more than 25 years as a soldier, attorney, teacher, social welfare worker, Government official and 'community servant.'"

Sigal himself is in the peculiar position of having indorsed both Campbell and Thomas P. Morgan, jr., the "official" candidate of the District Democratic Central Committee. As a member of that group, Sigal voted for Morgan some weeks ago.

The Greater Washington Area Council of the American Veterans Committee yesterday wrote Mr. Truman urging him to appoint as Commissioner someone who is "a vigorous supporter" of home rule for the District. The council said that within a few days it will poll 'all persons prominently mentioned for the position" on their home rule stand.

Colonel Johnson is now assistant to the Selective Service Director, Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey. He is also chairman of the District Parole Board, vice president of the Washington Federation of Churches, of the Citizens Council for Community Planning, of the Council of Social Agencies and of the Washington Housing Association.

D. C. Hopes to Get Sales Tax Started by July 1

District officials last night voiced new hope that a 2 per cent District sales tax may take effect by July 1.

The Senate may take up the controversial sales tax bill this week. Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.) in charge of the bill, said he hopes an opening may be found for it in the crowded Senate calendar late in the week.

But Senator Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.) leader of a Sales tax opposition bloc, has served notice that he would make every effort to block the sales levy.

Plenty of Amendments

He said there would be "plenty" of amendments offered to the revenue bill. These are expected to embody a four-point substitute program which Johnston's group has proposed, including an increased Federal payment to the District, a stiffer income tax law, and property and liquor tax increases.

Property and liquor tax hikes are called for in the revenue bill now awaiting action, but Johnston's group would boost the ante on them. The bill now proposes a 15-cent increase in the present $2 per $100 rate on real estate, and a 50 per cent increase in liquor taxes. Johnston's group urged a 25-cent boost in the property tax rate, and an approximate doubling of liquor levies.

Washington's Commissioners had fixed today as their hoped-for deadline on enactment of the sales tax. As now written, the bill would allow two months between the date of enactment and the time of actually starting to apply the sales tax. City officials estimated that $1,250,000 in expected sales tax revenue would have to be written off for every month of delay in passage after May 1.

Senator Hunt, however, said an amendment might be offered to give the District, perhaps, 30 days instead of 60 days to put the sales tax into effect after it became law. District officials said last night it probably would be possible to get the sales tax operating within 45 days, or maybe even 30 days, after enactment.

Goal Is 18 Million a Year

The revenue bill is designed to raise some 18 million dollars a year. In the fiscal year starting July 1, the bill would erase an estimated eight million dollar budget deficit, and also provide funds to give city employes a retroactive $330 pay raise. Pending legislation would give them the raises to put them on a par with the Federal workers who got that raise last year.

Meanwhile, the Senate District Committee scheduled an executive meeting for 10 a. m. Tuesday to discuss a bill to set up a second Juvenile Court judgeship and a bill to permit revising the charter of the Washington Gas Light Co.

Chest Agencies Seek Increases

Washington's private welfare agencies, many of whose services are currently being reduced because of inadequate funds, are asking for more money for next year, Ferdinand V. Grayson, assistant executive director and budget director for UCS, has revealed.

Grayson told reporters that many of the member welfare groups of UCS cannot reduce expenses under the 1949 level without closing down their services. One agency is turning away unemployed applicants, another has dropped its program of relief for prisoners' families, and still another, a children's institution, will probably run out of money by October, he said.

Placement of children in foster homes has been reduced because of lack of funds, Grayson said, and a reduction in the staff of a mental health aid institution has resulted in a long waiting list of patients.

Because of low salaries paid to professional workers and a virtual moratorium on increases this year, Morale in a number of agencies is low, he said.

In an attempt to remedy the current grim situation, agency officials are asking for more funds for next year.

In October, when the Community Chest Federation will conduct its annual campaign for funds, the general public will decide, by the amount of its individual contributions, the final answer to these requests.

But right now, the 24 men and women volunteer members of the UCS budget committee, headed by Robert W. Wilson, are already at work on their part of the answer.

Third Negro Is Pulpit Guest

A Presbyterian ministerial exchange plan, delayed recently because only two of 12 white churches consulted had agreed to accept Negro ministers for a day, yesterday was tentatively set for June 5, after a third white church signified acceptance.

This was disclosed yesterday by the Rev. Ralph K. Merker, general Presbyter of the Washington City Presbytery.

Mr. Merker said that Western Presbyterian Church, of which the Rev. Stewart McKenzie is pastor, agreed to accept one of the three Negro clergymen in the Presbytery as guest preacher.

Previously only the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church and the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church had assented.

The Presbytery of Washington City, made up of representatives of 42 area churches, three of them Negro, and four missions unanimously approved the pulpit exchange plan at its March meeting. It was to have taken place Sunday.

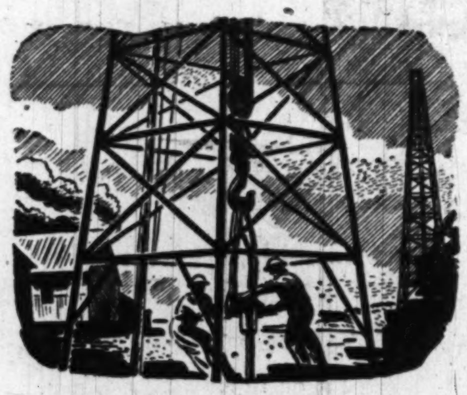
Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) Reports for 1948...

A year of Progress and Results for an Oil-using World!..

OIL SHORTAGE FEARS of a year ago have vanished. All around the world, oil resources are expanding. In doing their part to meet the rising needs for oil this Company and its affiliates last year made the greatest efforts in their history. Here are some facts from this Company's Annual Report to its more than 200,000 stockholders...

1 TOTAL PRODUCTION AGAIN INCREASED. After setting new records in both 1946 and 1947, this Company and affiliates in 1948 increased crude oil production by 8% over the year before. Output of crude oil by our domestic affiliates represented 9% of the total crude produced in the U. S. Output of affiliates, world-wide, represented 14% of world production.



More wells drilled than ever before. Proved reserves increased

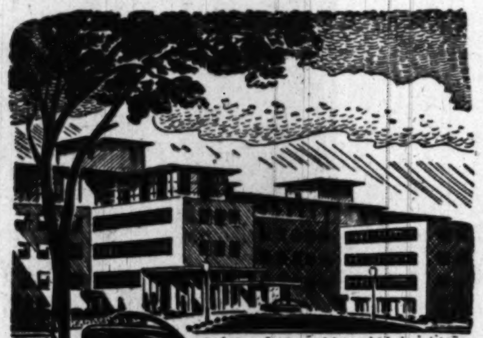
2 SEARCH FOR NEW OIL SOURCES SET RECORDS. More wells were drilled than ever before. Costs for this were a record $374,000,000 in 1948. Proved reserves in the earth at year's end were at a new high.

14 New Supertankers ordered, each nearly twice the size of wartime tankers

3 EVEN GREATER COSTS FOR EXPANSION AND REPLACEMENT were again required to meet rising needs for oil. Jersey Standard and affiliates spent a record $529,415,000 in 1948, even more than 1947's investment of 426 millions. For these needs and payment of dividends, money again was drawn from earnings, from borrowing, from sale of assets, and from further call on savings of past years.

New facilities like this modern refinery help increase oil supplies

4 NEW FACILITIES RESULTED ALL OVER THE OIL-PRODUCING WORLD. In Venezuela, the world's largest pipeline was completed. Fourteen new supertankers were ordered, each nearly twice the capacity of wartime tankers. At Montreal and Edmonton in Canada; at Billings, Montana; Bayway, New Jersey; and Baton Rouge, Louisiana, new refining facilities for more and better oil products went into service. At Amuay, Venezuela, a new 60,000 barrels per day refinery neared completion.



Oil research goes on in this new Research Center, housing 80 laboratories in Linden, New Jersey

5 RESEARCH WORK AND RESULTS WENT FORWARD, at a cost to the Company of $20,000,000. At Linden, New Jersey, a new research center was opened, where 600 scientists and their assistants are at work. Along with hundreds of other Company researchers these people are developing better methods of discovering oil, of drilling wells, of refining from oil, shale and coal, more and higher quality products to meet the growing needs.

6 RELATIONS WITH EMPLOYEES CONTINUED EXCELLENT. Again there were no domestic strikes or work stoppages. At year's end the gross investment in property, plant and equipment amounted to $26,600 for each of the 129,000 employees of Jersey and its affiliated companies.

7 BOTH INCOME AND EXPENDITURES ROSE. As reported in the consolidated statement, total income of all companies was $3,332,187,000, an increase of 40% over 1947. At the same time, costs were also up 40%. $1,386,248,000 was paid for crude oil and other supplies, $573,459,000 paid to employees, $492,000,000 for other operating costs. Taxes of $268,000,000 were paid.

8 RECORD NET EARNINGS, LARGELY PLOUGHED BACK. Consolidated net earnings totaled $365,605,000. Yet this total, plus affiliates' earnings assignable to stockholders other than Jersey, plus all of the year's depreciation allowances was just about equal to the amount of money put back into the business to meet pressing needs for expansion and replacements. Stockholders of Standard Oil Company (N.J.) received dividends of $2.00 per share of the Company's stock, plus a stock dividend of two shares for each 40 shares held.

ALTHOUGH world oil consumption for the year increased 6.5%, and U.S. consumption 5.6%... the need was met and more. Threatened shortages were averted. Proved reserves in the earth are greater than ever before. New, modern facilities for meeting present and future needs are coming into operation throughout the world. Increasingly, human progress calls for more and more oil. In every way, the year 1948 was a year of progress and results for an oil-using world.

Vanishing Suspect Is Shot, Reappears

A special policeman fired two shots into the chest of a housebreaking suspect at 12:30 a. m. yesterday and set off a dizzying whirl of events that kept police busy for hours.

Tipp

For a time police had on their hands a shooting on 14th st. and no wounded man and a wounded man in Casualty Hospital and no shooting.

They finally tied the two together and identified the wounded man as Boyzie Vance Key, 36, of 907 5th st. ne., who is wanted in Winston-Salem, N. C., for housebreaking and larceny. Key is in Casualty Hospital and not expected to live.

Policeman Knocked Down

At about 12:30 a. m., a special policeman, Harry E. Tipp, 46, of 2800 Woodley rd. nw., was making a routine check of the doors of the Ben Hundley Tire Shop, 3446 14th st. nw. He said he surprised two men trying to break into a side door, drew his .38-caliber revolver and placed them under arrest.

Tipp was marching them to a call box when one of the men whirled, grabbed him and knocked him to the ground. The second man joined the assault and they grappled with Tipp.

The special policeman fired two shots directly at one of the men. The second man wrested the revolver from him and the two suspects fled.

At gunpoint, they tried to stop a car driven by Richard L. Thomas of 4605 Beachwood dr., College Park, Md. Thomas drove off too rapidly for them. Tipp saw them get in a second car, however, and drive off. Tipp reported the incident to police.

Three hours later, at 3:30 a. m., a cab driver, James C. Nuckols of 1438 Fairmont st. nw., was hailed by two men in the 900 block of 5th st. ne. Nuckols saw that one of the men had been shot.

The wounded man was helped into the cab by his companion. The companion did not get in the cab, but ordered the driver to go to the nearest police station.

Nuckols drove to the Ninth Precinct Station. The wounded man was removed from the cab, unconscious, and taken in a patrol wagon to Casualty Hospital.

At the hospital, police could not learn who the wounded man was or where he had been shot. He regained partial consciousness and muttered something about being shot by the boy friend of a girl at 1st st. and Harrison ct. se.

Woman Identifies Him as Son

Police found there had been an altercation at that address, but witnesses taken to the hospital said the wounded man was not one of those involved.

The clothes of the wounded man were examined. On a T-shirt was a laundry mark with the name "Key." Police went through the "Keys" in the telephone directory. They talked to one woman who agreed to go to the hospital and view the wounded man. She identified him as her son.

Police broadcast a lookout for the son's car. It was picked up a short time later by a motorcycle policeman. The son was driving. The mother said she must have made a mistake.

Next, police traced a tailor's mark on the wounded man's trousers to a Northeast tailor shop. The mark belonged to a man named Paul Key, the tailor said. Police went to an address but learned that Paul Key had moved. Two women at the address went to the hospital and identified the wounded man as the brother of Paul Key.

Put in Cab by Brother

Police returned to the tire shop later yesterday and learned that Paul Key was an employe there.

Questioned, Paul Key, who lives at 228 N st. nw., admitted he was the one who had placed his brother in the cab. He said his brother had telephoned him early yesterday, told him he had been shot on 14th st., and needed help. Paul Key said he went to his brother's house, then helped him outside and put him in the cab.

Paul Key said his brother had been using the alias of Thomas Truesdale. The fugitive squad found it had a warrant from Winston-Salem for the brother's arrest.

Police believe Tipp interrupted an attempt to crack the safe in the tire shop. They found a hacksaw, a punch and a leather glove near the scene.

HE CARRIES ON...

This eleven-year old boy, blinded and left armless by a hand-grenade explosion, has learned to read braille with his lips. With the help of a special machine, he can also write braille, holding the stylus with his stumps.

Here is an excerpt from one of his letters:

"Thank you for sending me the harmonica. I loved it very much, but I gave it to my friend. I know you will not mind, he is only eight years old and he has no legs. He lets me play it too. We are happy and we are learning. We love to sing."

This boy is but one of thousands who have been maimed and disfigured by war—war which is still raging in China and Greece, where we have recently opened headquarters. Funds are needed for plastic surgery, artificial eyes, and prosthetic limbs.

You alone, or a group can help the thousands of children now in desperate need overseas, by becoming a foster parent. You will receive a case history and photograph of the child. Correspondence through our office is encouraged.

The Plan is helping children of fourteen different nationalities in Greece, France, Poland, Belgium, Italy, Holland, England, Czechoslovakia and China. By aiding these children you are working for the greatest aim of all—for peace.

The Foster Parents' Plan does not do mass relief. Each child is treated as an individual with the idea that besides food, clothing, shelter, and education, the child will live in a homelike atmosphere and receive the loving care that so rightfully belongs to childhood.

Falls Kill 7, 2 Die by Burns In Home Mishaps

What the reckless why-not moppet seat is doing these days:

Eating matchheads and iron pills; drinking cleaning fluids and furniture polish.

Such tastes helped swell the toll of home accident injuries to 121 last week.

Seven adults died from falls and two suffed fatal burns in other home accidents, the Accident Prevention Service of the District Red Cross reported.

Loan by Bank Pays Workers

This is the story of the loan:

Thousands of Government workers have missed one, two or even three paydays because the first deficiency bill, carrying money for their salaries, have not yet been agreed upon. The 538-million-dollar measure has passed both houses of Congress, but conferees have been unable to reach an agreement on differences.

Trying to figure out a way to meet the personal dollar-and-cents problem of the employes in the Housing Expediter's office, Charles P. Liff, an attorney in the agency since 1943, discussed the problem last week with his wife at their home, 2830 31st st. se.

"The idea came to him one night in bed," explained Mrs. Liff. "He said he would go talk it over with the Southwest branch bank manager next day. The boys at the office all laughed at him. But it was a real thrill to know they made the loan."

The branch bank official took the loan idea to the head office. The bank is headed by Daniel W. Bell, long a Government career employe and therefore familiar with payless paydays in the past.

Liff discussed the matter with Madigan. Then the bank decided it would grant a loan "up to" $108,000, the estimated payroll for two periods at the OHE head office here.

The bank asked Madigan and Liff to sign the note, which they did. The money then was placed in a special account at the bank and two bonded employes of OHE were given power to pay it out. They were the regular director of the budget branch and the chief of the audit section.

As each employe came forward Friday—and the same will be true for those paid Monday—he signed his name to a joint note with 25 or more names on a single sheet of paper. These notes will be turned over to the bank.

Madigan explained the bank offered the money at the unusually low interest rate because there is a reasonable certainty Congress eventually will vote the funds.

After a White House conference yesterday with President Truman, Chairman Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.) of the House Appropriations Committee said he hopes a conference meeting early this week will be able to break the deadlock.

Cannon said he would suggest the House recede from its demand that Reclamation Commissioner Michael W. Straus be put back on the Government payroll and instead leave the question to the regular Interior Department appropriation bill for decision.

On the second major difference, funds to reconstruct the White House, Cannon said he had an idea for a solution but that it was so "nebulous" he would not discuss it as yet.

President Truman himself felt the effects of the lack of payroll funds. He received only a partial pay check yesterday, probably about one third of the $12,500 April pay to which he is entitled under his recent raise.

There is some four billion dollars in hte Treasury's cash till, but none of it can be paid out for salaries for the 30 or so agencies affected until the appropriation measure becomes law.

2 Remaining of 7 Defendants to Be Tried Jointly for Rape

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Martinsville, Va., April 30.—The two remaining defendants of seven on trial here for rape of a 32-year-old white woman will be tried jointly on Monday, it was disclosed today.

Five of the defendants, all Negroes, have been convicted of raping Mrs. Ruby Stroud Floyd, wife of a Martinsville department store manager, last January 8. The jury recommended that they be sentenced to death. Each has been tried by a different jury.

Commonwealth's Attorney I. W. Cubine, who is directing the prosecution with two assistants, said today he consented at the request of defense counsel to a joint trial of James Hairston, 20, and John Clabon Taylor, 21.

Already convicted are Joe Henry Hampton, 19, Frank Hairston, jr., 19, Booker T. Millner, 19, Howard Lee Hairston, 18, and Francis Desales Grayson, 37. The Hairstons are not related.

Judge Kennon C. Whittle, of the Martinsville Circuit Court, has overruled a defense motion in each case to set aside the verdict.

Cubine said he would ask the death sentence for the remaining defendants.

Another development in the case here today was receipt by William T. Alexander, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of a request that the record be made available to his organization at the conclusion of the trial.

He said it originated with Martin A. Martin, Richmond attorney for the State association. It was transmitted through an NAACP member in nearby Danville, Alexander said.

In discussing the case with a reporter, Alexander said he and other members of the association here feel the court "has bent over backwards to assure the men a fair and impartial trial."

"We are very well pleased with the conduct of the case," Alexander said.

He voiced the opinion of many city officials and citizens in that respect. Alexander said "he felt that there had been considerable tension since the alleged assault occurred because of the nature of the matter."

He said the reaction among the population, however, had shown no evidence of getting out of hand.

Alexander said he feared the incident had caused "a setback of from between 10 and 15 years in our progress with the white people." He described the relationship as certainly the best in the State and said he is sure the "better class" of people do not "hold it against us as a race, but consider it the affair of a few individuals."

Alexander said he was among a number of persons approached earlier in the case to sign a petition asking for a change of venue for which a motion was overruled.

He said at the time he felt that the accused would receive a fair and just trial here so he refused to sign an affidavit. There were 114 names on the trial petition, none of whom were Negroes, Alexander said, although he knew of a number who had been asked if they cared to sign.

Alexander said that since the trial has been in progress, however, he feels he would have preferred that it had taken place elsewhere.

He said he was told by court officials that a total of 33 Negroes had been listed on panels from which the juries were chosen. This was in view of the fact that 17 would be required by law covering proportionate representation among qualified voters, Alexander said he was told.

There have been no Negroes on any of the five juries that have sat so far.

Many disqualified themselves for cause when they stated they were opposed to capital punishment or had already formed an opinion of the case.

Others were stricken on peremptory challenge by the defense or prosecution, after a panel of 21 prospective jurors is drawn each side is allowed four challenges without cause leaving 12 jurors as an alternate.

Three was the greatest number of Negroes remaining on any one panel of 21 before peremptory challenges were issued.

The court had admitted as evidence signed confessions from each of the defendants that has appeared thus far. All have pleaded not guilty. Hamton testified that he was so drunk he didn't know what he was doing at the time.

Millner and Grayson testified they did not go through with an attempt to assault the woman although they admitted being at the scene.

The Federal Diary

by Jerry Kluttz

Amendment Could Knock Out 100,000 Government Jobs

The Bridges-Ferguson amendment—it could knock out up to 100,000 Federal jobs if enacted into law. No agency would be exempt from the rider which would cut their funds for administrative expenses by 5 per cent.

The Senate voted the rider onto the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill. That measure was recommitted to its Appropriations Committee and its members are debating how the 5 per cent should be applied. That in itself is a vital decision to the agencies involved.

The Senate parliamentarian is of the opinion that the 5 per cent slash must be made on the amount voted the Labor Department and Federal Security Agency by the House. If this opinion is upheld, these two agencies would have to take a deep cut in both money and personnel.

However, Senator Ferguson, coauthor of the rider, says he intended for the 5 per cent to be cut from the amounts reported out by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

In fact, the Senator isn't satisfied with the rider since it would arbitarily cut all administrative funds by 5 per cent; agency heads would have no discretion in the matter. The efficient offices would be hard hit; the overstaffed offices wouldn't suffer by the rider.

Ferguson says he hopes to rewrite his rider in committee to have it "direct" agency heads to make the reductions anywhere they see fit so long as the over-all reduction is at least 5 per cent. If 5 per cent budget slash is voted, agency heads would much rather have discretion in making the reductions instead of a flat across-the-board affair.

The Bridges-Ferguson rider is aimed primarily at preventing deficit financing and a tax increase, but it's also intended to reduce the number of Federal workers. That's for sure. Senator Bridges made that fact plain during debate on his rider. He said the 2,100,000 Federal workers could be reduced 5 per cent—that would be 105,000—without impairing the efficiency of the Government.

Incidentally, officials in more than one agency are taking seriously the newest congressional economy drive. They already are debating what activities to cut back if the Bridges-Ferguson rider becomes law.

The economy drive also has dampened some of the enthusiasm for a new Federal employe pay raise. The cost of any new raise voted would have to be absorbed by most agencies out of available funds—which would mean the firing of more people. With large-scale layoffs possible, the average employe is thinking more and more in terms of keeping his job.

This concern is reflected in the turnover rate in Government which has slumped to 2 per cent a month, or the lowest rate in years. This compares with 7.6 per cent in 1946 and 5.4 per cent in 1947. The low rate is concrete evidence that that Government employment is settling down.

Play Area End Of Segregation Is Demanded

Rep. Klein Calls on Board to Take Step; Meeting Set May 10

Representative Arthur G. Klein (D., N. Y.) yesterday called on the District Recreation Board to "abolish segregation on all areas under its control."

Chairman Harry S. Wender of the recreation group said the segregation problem "undoubtedly will come up" at the next regular meeting, May 10, as a result of Friday's action by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The commission, by a 6-to-2 vote with two members abstaining, voted to remove all racial designations from its recreation system map. The move put the clear power to continue or discontinue segregation in the hands of the Recreation Board.

'Victory for Ideals'

Klein's statement called the commission's move "a victory for the democratic ideals of equality before the law of the people . . ." and added:

"I now expect the District of Columbia Board of Recreation to abandon its untenable position and to abolish segregation on all areas under its control. The board is compelled by logic to take this step, since it has repeatedly said that it has relied on the official position of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission for authority in its position.

Wender would make no direct comment on the commission's Friday action, nor would he predict what the Recreation Board might do on May 10.

He said, however, that "the responsibility of the Recreation Board is no different today than it was before. It always has had the inherent policy making power."

Matters Not Affected

He said the decision has no effect on matters now before the board's by-laws committee. These include a proposal by the Society of Friends to operate for a trial period one or more playgrounds on a nonsegregated basis. The Friends would supply the staff to man the playgrounds.

Also before the committee is the question of after-school use of public school buildings for nonsegregated meetings.

Wender revealed that last Tuesday, Maj. Gen. U. S. Grant, 3d, planning commission chairman, appeared before the board's by-laws committee at the committee's request to discuss the segregation matter.

Wender said the committee approved a resolution declaring that racial designations in the recreation system plan of the commission should be continued as a joint responsibility of the two groups and that any change should be made by joint action.

But the Friday action was contrary to this resolution. Two members of the recreation unit filed a minority report urging an end to the racial designation such as was voted by the planning unit.

It was learned yesterday the motion to end racial designation on the commission's map was drafted by the Interior Department and presented by its representative on the commission.

Eight of the 10 commission members were present, with the other two sending proxies—Senator J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.) and Representative John L. McMillan (D., S. C.).

It was learned that District Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young was one of the two members who abstained from voting.

Doolittle Wants U. S. to Meet Aggression With 'A' Bomb

The United States must be prepared "physically, mentally and morally" to drop atomic bombs on Russian industrial centers "at the first sign of aggression," Lieut. Gen. James H. Doolittle, wartime commander of the Eighth Air Farce, said here last night.

Doolittle, now vice president of Shell Union Oil Corp., spoke at a banquet of Georgetown University Alumni Association at the Mayflower Hotel. The banquet honored the Very Rev. Hunter Guthrie, S. J., who will be installed at 8 p.m. today as the university's thirty-fifth president.

War with Russia can be avoided, the leader of the first American raid on Tokyo in World War II told the 250 alumni and guests present, despite "the wholly evil designs" of the 13 men in the Kremlin. The United States must seek to avoid it, he said, but not by appeasement.

He proposed a three-pronged program for peace, consisting of American military supremacy, national and international education to teach peoples everywhere democracy, and a worldwide spiritual revival.

The first part—the military—he described as a "temporary expedient" to be carried out only until one of the other phases, most likely the educational, takes effect.

He proposed the educational phase to be a well-thought-out propaganda strategy, to "aggressively carry our story to the people of Russia," while the spiritual phase would seek to make men more cognizant of their obligations to God and their fellow men.

While he believes war is avoidable, he said "even though it should come with all its horror, civilization as we know it will survive, provided we promptly institute and vigorously prosecute a plan which is devoted to the eventual better realization of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

Militarily, he urged the Nation to concentrate on air power since, in a ground battle, Russia would have important military advantages.

"The fact that we, and we alone, have the atomic bomb," he declared, "and the means of delivering it with assurance and precision to any point on the surface of the earth is the greatest deterrent to Russia's planned aggression."

He added he felt it "the one thing which is permitting us to help the unfortunate nations which suffered more than we during the last war," without precipitating a new war. He urged Russia be made to realize we will drop atomic bombs at the first sign of aggression. He wants Americans conditioned to the necessity for such action.

"War with Russia cannot be avoided by appeasement," he declared. "Appeasement will merely bring continuing and ever-increasing demands. Appeasement is, at best, postponement—postponement until the time is more favorable for Russia."

To conserve the Nation's resources, he urged the armed forces be kept at the lowest level consistent with national security.

Sees "Adequate" Force Needs

He said he did not believe it necessary for us to maintain a military establishment as large as Russia's, but that we can and must maintain "an adequate force in being and, above all, our technological advantage."

He hit briefly at jealousies between the armed forces, urging a balance be achieved between the services, not on basis of jealousy, prestige, tradition or equation, but on basis of the over-all job to be done.

Father Guthrie succeeds the Very Rev. Lawrence C. Gorman, who has been assigned to establish a Jesuit Retreat House at Chapel Point, Md.

At 11 a. m. today in an outdoors ceremony on the Georgetown campus, Father Guthrie will celebrate a Solemn High Mass in presence of the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington. The mass will be celebrated in Dahlgren Chapel in event of inclement weather.

The Georgetown University Band will give a concert on the campus at 3:30 p. m., and the inauguration proper will take place at 8 o'clock in Gaston Hall, with the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., vice president of the university, presenting the symbols of office and officially inducting the new president.

D. C. Building Loses 'Skin' in Face Washing

The District Building gots its face scrubbed yesterday, scrubbed so briskly that some of the "skin" came off.

To launch a city-wide cleanup campaign, firemen aimed their water hoses at the gray-stone seat of municipal government and attacked 44 years of accumulated city soot and starlings' nests.

The pressure of the water chipped off the last six letters of the word "District" from the side of the front door. And a few pieces of stone from upper-story cornices were dislodged.

About 9000 gallons of water were expended in the two-hour hosing, according to Deputy Fire Chief Percy A. Davis, who expressed satisfaction with the results afterwards. "We got a lot off it," he said. Only the front of the building was worked over.

The first day of the 10-day campaign, sponsored by the Board of Trade, also featured a radio broadcast by Fire Marshal Raymond C. Roberts, who said any concerted effort by the people of Washington to clean up and fix up their homes and places of business "is bound to reduce the number of fires."

In a continuing cleanup program being staged by the North Washington Council of Citizens Association, Chairman Karl K. Gower last week asked the Sixth and Tenth Precinct police to clamp down on persons in the area who are using public spaces and vacant lots for dumps.

Gower's letter to the two precinct captains said "public spaces" would include streets, sidewalks, alleys and the parking areas between sidewalks and curbs.

McCarran Presses for Slum Funds

Nevadan Accuses Ihlder of 'Aversion' To His Measure for Redevelopment

Senator McCarran (D., Nev.) yesterday called on congressional leaders to put the District slum clearance law to work by appropriating money for it.

McCarran, chief sponsor of the law of 1946, which set up the District Redevelopment Land Agency, said, too, that he questions whether it has been entirely the fault of Congress that the necessary funds have not been appropriated.

He said that John Ihlder, executive director of the National Capital Housing Authority, had "shown an aversion" to the redevelopment law.

Objects to Amendments

Ihlder said, on the contrary, that he liked the Redevelopment Act in the form in which McCarran steered it through the Senate, but did not approve the House amendments "crippling to public housing" that became part of the final law.

The Senate has just acted to erase one of the features of the redevelopment law which Ihlder regarded as "crippling"—the section taking away site acquisition powers from NCHA. Senate action restored these powers to the NCHA through amendment of the national housing bill. The bill is now before the House.

McCarran's appeal for Congressional support for appropriations to implement the redevelopment law was contained in a letter sent to these members of the two Houses:

Senators O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee that will consider the slum clearance money question; Sparkman (D., Ala.), sponsor of the housing bill amendment that restored site acquisition powers to NCHA; Ferguson (R., Mich.), who has been making his own study of the District slum problem; the full membership of the Senate District committee headed by J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.); Chairman Brent Spence (D., Ky.) of the House Banking and Currency Committee in charge of the national housing bill; Representative Dean (D., N. C.), a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and members of the House District Judiciary Subcommittee in charge of handling the redevelopment law, headed by Representative Harris (D., Ark.)

Renewed Concern Cited

McCarran's letter cited the lately renewed congressional concern about District slums, and to "the proposal that power to clear slums and build low-rent housing be returned to the National Capital Housing Authority."

Recent discussion of the slums here has "ignored or lost sight of" the Redevelopment Act, McCarran said.

That act, he added, was the result of years of effort, was approved by advocates of both private and public housing and still is practical and workable. "If this bill, already on the statute books, is implemented by effective administration and an adequate appropriation, it can and will provide the vehicle for solving Washington's slum problem," he said.

"I am unable to explain why the bill has not been more vigorously administered, but I think that is an explanation Congress might well seek," McCarran said. "On several occasions since 1945 I have urged appropriation of adequate funds to permit the Redevelopment Land Agency to function as Congress intended, but Congress has not acted. I do not believe this failure to act has been entirely the fault of Congress."

Wilson, Herblock, Henderson Get Awards

General Electric's President Voices Warning on Reds

Communists are part of an espionage program and are not entitled to civil rights protection, Charles E. Wilson, chairman of the President's Commission on Civil Rights, declared here last night.

Addressing the third annual Bill of Rights banquet of the American Veterans Committee, Wilson declared: "Communism has moved out of the area of civil rights and into the area of espionage. With that we know how to deal."

"There has been a great deal of hysteria over this whole matter of American Communists, but this hysteria has been used very cleverly by the Communists as a refuge and a shield, to confuse and disarm.

"My concern for civil rights for all Americans has not abated a particle, but it does not extend to sheltering treason, condoning traitors or embracing the activities of those who clearly and coldly will invent any lie and commit any crime to destroy the United States," Wilson emphasized.

Wilson, president of the General Electric Co., received the AVC award for activities in advancing civil rights for his service on the presidential committee. The award was one of three presented at the AVC clubhouse, 1751 New Hampshire ave. nw.

Other recipients were Herbert Block (Herblock), editorial cartoonist of The Washington Post, who received the award for his work in the press-radio field, and Dr. E. B. Henderson, head of physical education in the Negro public schools, who was cited for his efforts against discrimination and segregation in local schools.

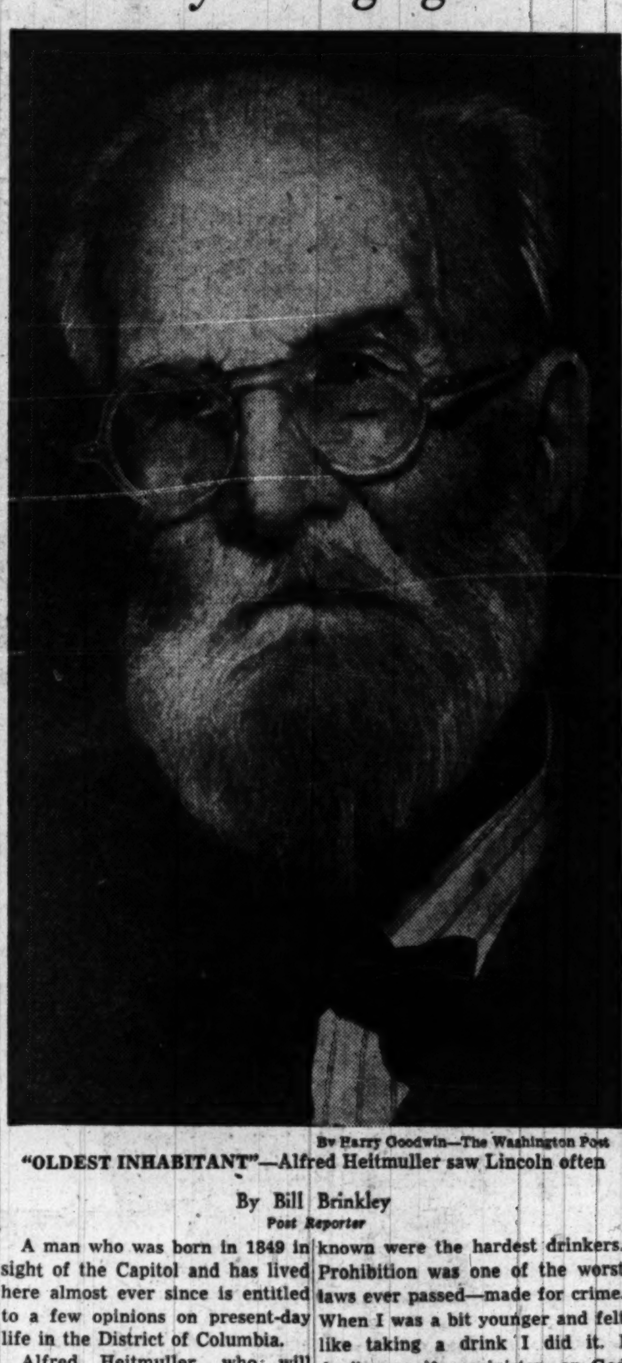
At 100, He Remembers District With Only 1 Hanging a Year



By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

"OLDEST INHABITANT"—Alfred Heitmuller saw Lincoln often

By Bill Brinkley

Post Reporter

A man who was born in 1849 in sight of the Capitol and has lived here almost ever since is entitled to a few opinions on present-day life in the District of Columbia.

Alfred Heitmuller, who will reach the magic age of 100 Monday and celebrate it with a party at his daughter's home, 1325 Gallatin st. nw., gave forth yesterday on this subject—and with astounding vigor.

For one thing, he is appalled with the crime wave the District is witnessing. Before the Civil War—at the start of which he was 12 years old—there was an average of one hanging for murder in the District a year, he says.

Most of all, though, it is what happens to girls who come from farms and small towns to work in the Nation's Capital.

Deplores Crime Among Females

"Yes, this crime in the District!" he exclaimed through a magnificent white beard and gesturing with his German scented-wood cane as if it were a fencing foil. "But particularly among females. The social diseases these girls get when they come here!"

What should be done about it?

"Only God Almighty knows," he roared.

Mr. Heitmuller doesn't eat "invalid food," his daughter, Mrs. George O. Berger, with whom he lives, said, and woe to the person who suggests it.

"They want to wait on me as if I were an infant," Mr. Heitmuller stormed across the room.

Sometimes he has just a little trouble with his sight—sees double at times, Mrs. Berger said.

"Triple when it's a pretty girl," Mr. Heitmuller added.

How does a man get to be 100?

"Hard work!" Mr. Heitmuller replied instantly, thrusting his cane out. He was a truck farmer all his working life. "I kept my garden right up until the time I was 90." He still gardens a little in back of the house.

Drinking, he added, has nothing to do with age.

"Some of the oldest men I've known were the hardest drinkers. Prohibition was one of the worst laws ever passed—made for crime. When I was a bit younger and felt like taking a drink I did it. I don't care if a minister, or God Almighty—of course, I didn't know Him—was coming down the street."

The oldest member of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, he saw Abraham Lincoln hundreds of times. Lincoln passed Heitmuller's house regularly when making trips to the Summer White House at Soldiers' Home. But it disgusts him the way people "make to do" over a President of the United States these days. It wasn't like that in Lincoln's time and he himself feels the same about Presidents as ever.

"Seeing Truman wouldn't amount to any more to me than seeing you," he told his interviewer crisply.

There will be a cake and open house on the birthday Monday. As it has for many years, the day will begin for Mr. Heitmuller when his great-granddaughter, 7-year-old Betsy Lingebach, of Hyattsville, comes into his bedroom when he first awakens and sings "Happy Birthday" to him.

Paresis Losing Ground, Says Dr. Overholser

The number of patients admitted to St. Elizabeths Hospital for treatment of syphilis-induced mental ailments has been halved in the past few years.

This was disclosed yesterday in the annual report of the Social Hygiene Society of the District.

The Society said Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent of the hospital, was asked recently, "Is syphilis still losing ground as a mental disease hazard?"

His answer, the report says, was: "Yes, the situation as regards syphilis of the nervous system, especially general paresis, is one of the bright spots in the field of psychiatry."

Progress Made in Treatment

The program of early discovery and treatment and progress made in methods of treatment are the reason, Dr. Overholser told the society.

"Only a few years ago," Dr. Overholser reported to the society, "when military patients were still being admitted, we used to have as many as 600 patients under active treatment for syphilis. We have, at the moment, only about 300."

The society estimates this is saving District taxpayers more than $260,000 a year in addition to preventing "human wreckage."

The report, prepared by Ray H. Everett, executive secretary of the society, shows that 17,430 persons attended 177 lectures and seminars given by the society on health, sex education, marriage guidance and law enforcement.

Television Used

In addition there were 2515 consultations on an invididual basis 714 of them marriage counsel clients.

The society also sent out its message through the medium of news papers, radio and television broadcasts, phamplets, books and exhibits.

The report also calls attention to the fact that "Washington despite its high economic level and its attractiveness to those who would profit from commercialized prostitution, continues to be one of the world's cleanest cities in that respect."

Traffic Toll Mounts to 4; 11 Injured in 3-Car Crash

D. C. Man Killed On Ritchie Hwy.; Monday Accident Victim Dies Here

Traffic accidents involving Washington residents caused three deaths yesterday, while a fourth death was recorded early today as result of an earlier accident.

Paul D. Ribb, 25, of 1326 Massachusetts ave. nw., was killed and 11 other persons injured early yesterday in a three-car crash on the Ritchie Highway near Baltimore.

Anne Arundel County police said Ribb was southbound, shortly before 1 a. m., when his car was in collision with one driven by Frank L. Johanning, 20, of Baltimore.

Ribb, his brother Orville, 20, and Miss Eleanor Myers, 28, of Baltimore, were catapulted from Ribb's car. As Paul Ribb lay in the roadway, Johanning's car careened into a telegraph pole, turned over and landed on him. Orville Ribb and Miss Myers escaped with cuts and bruises. Miss Myers was thrown 50 feet

Johanning and two men riding with him were also thrown from their car and hurt. One, Michael J. Hennery, 20, of Baltimore, was reported in serious condition in South Baltimore General Hospital with a fractured skull.

A few minutes after the first collision, a car driven by John B. Taylor, 40, of Baltimore, crashed into the rear of Ribb's auto, police said. Taylor and five passengers in his car were cut and bruised.

Paul Ribb had lived at the Allies Club, at the Massachusetts ave., address, for about six month. His brother, Orville, lived with him. Several weeks ago he had been appointed a salesman for this area by the A. E. Staley Co., of Decatur, Ill.

William King, about 75, an inmate assigned to St. Elizabeths Hospital farm, Oxon Hill, Md., was killed almost instantly about 1:15 a.m. when he was struck by an automobile on Route 224 near Piscataway.

Maryland State Police said King stepped into the path of a car driven by Kenneth Hosmer, 10 Flag Green, Bellevue, D. C. King's chest was crushed and his skull fractured.

Meanwhile, a head-on automobile collision at U. S. Route 301 and U. S. Route 50, about 13 miles east of the District, yesterday had claimed its second life when Corpl. Earl H. Cunningham, 19, of Fort Meade, Md., died of injuries at Annapolis.

Corpl. James F. Wollard, 22, of Hagerstown, was killed instantly in the Friday crash. The car carrying the two soldiers collided with one driven by James Grego, 1306 Euclid st. nw. Both cars were demolished.

John J. Salamy, 18, injured in a streetcar-automobile collision Monday, died at 12:45 a.m. today in Casualty Hospital.

Salamy, who lived at 4210 East-West hwy., Bethesda, received head and internal injuries when his automobile was shoved 165 feet along the tracks after colliding with a streetcar at New Jersey ave. and K st. nw. He was employed as an assistant chef at the New Bagdad Restaurant, 1733 I st. nw.

Right Violated, Says Lawyer of 'Lost' Prisoner

Scott W. Fuller's constitutional right to a prompt trial was violated when he was imprisoned here for four months without bond or court hearings, his lawyer declared yesterday.

T. Emmett McKenzie, the attorney, made the claim in countering assertions of George Morris Fay, the United States Attorney, that Fuller's "guaranteed" rights were all afforded him.

Fuller, a 23-year-old resident of Sedalia, N. C., was arrested in that State last December for a $120 larceny that occurred here last summer. Fuller was brought here, placed in District Jail, and his case lay dormant until April 13, when McKenzie made inquiries about it in District Court.

It took just five days from that point for Fuller to be indicted. Legal arguments and trial of the case are scheduled for May 4.

The program will begin at 4:30 with a concert by the Marine Band. After a massing of the colors, Mrs. Frances Cox of the Gold Star Mothers will lay the first wreath on behalf of the mothers of the 1500 Distric men and women who fell in World War II.

Area News in Brief

Kensington Is Agog Over Fire Phone

Last week's change of telephone numbers for the Kensington Volunteer Fire Department is stirring up a lot of excitement.

It seems that the Fire Department has two phones, and only one is listed in the new directory—the emergency call phone. When this phone is buzzed, it automatically sets off an emergency alarm in the fire station house.

"It stirs up quite a bit of excitement" when the alarm goes off," says Jack E. Richardson, secretary of the Fire Department. And the alarm has been going off too often lately, since routine information-seeking callers can find only the emergency number.

For the benefit of Kensingtonians, the new emergency phone is Lockwood 5-1122. For information, business and so forth, call Lockwood 5-1121.

'Shot' With Sinker

"I've been shot in the back of the head," the man declared excitedly as he entered the emergency room of Gallinger Hospital yesterday.

He identified himself as Quentin Manson, 25, of 840 51st se. ne., and said he had been fishing on the west bank of the Eastern Branch of the Anacostia River when the lead hit him.

When investigation was completed, it was found that Manson actually had been struck accidentally on the back of the head with a lead sinker, cast by another fisherman.

Mrs. Homan Dies; Research Librarian

Mrs. Paul T. Homan, 49, wife of an economist on the staff of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, died yesterday of nephritis in Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore.

Mrs. Homan was a researcher for the wartime Office of Scientific Research and Development from 1942 to 1945. She had been a research librarian for American University for the past year and a half.

Mrs. Homan, the former Christine Chittenden, was a native of St. Louis, Mo., and a member of a pioneer family there. She left the city shortly after her marriage in 1924, to accompany her husband to a Cornell University post.

She came to Washington with her husband about 1934, then went with him to China in 1937, when he received a teaching assignment at the University of Peking.

The Homans were among those Americans rescued when the Japanese invaded the city later in the same year.

Mrs. Homan was an active backer of the National Symphony and of the China relief movement here.

G. G. Battle, Noted Lawyer, Is Dead at 80

New York, April 30 (NYHT).—George Gordon Battle, 80-year-old senior partner in the law firm of Battle, Fowler, Neaman, Stokes & Kheel, died Friday night in a hospital in Fredericksburg, Va.

Mr. Battle

He suffered a heart attack while en route to his country home in Orange County, Va., Mr. Fowler said.

Mr. Battle was one of the best known lawyers in New York City. His clients have ranged from such large corporations as the Diamond Match Co. to Earl Browder, former general secretary of the Communist Party in the United States.

Politically, Mr. Battle was a leading Democrat in the city. Almost at the outset of his legal career in 1891 he became affiliated with Tammany Hall and was active in support of its candidates thereafter.

Led Many Campaigns

As chairman of campaigns for a large variety of charities and civic enterprises, as a speaker at political and social gatherings, as a labor arbitrator and as chairman of several governmental commissions Mr. Battle was long active in the public interest.

He was the chairman of the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority when it was organized as the Triborough Bridge Authority in 1933. He was chairman of the conciliation board appointed in 1924 to settle a dispute between New York newspaper publishers and printers, chairman of Governor Alfred E. Smith's advisory commission for reform of the garment industry in 1924, and chairman of a committee in 1935 to investigate the effects of the National Recovery Act on the garment industry.

Mr. Battle ran for office only once, in 1909, as the Tammany candidate for district attorney of New York County against Charles S. Whitman who defeated him.

Mr. Battle was born in 1868 in Edgecombe County, North Carolina, at Cool Spring plantation, where his father's family had raised cotton on 20,000 acres of rich land for four generations. His father was Capt. Turner Westray Battle and his mother the former Lavinia Bassett Daniel. George Gordon Battle was one of 11 brothers and sisters and was reared in the best traditions of Southern geniality.

Twice Mr. Battle received appointments as a special assistant district attorney to investigate crime and corruption in New York City. In 1911 he conducted the inquiry into crime during the term of Mayor William S. Gaynor and in 1919 Governor Smith appointed him to present evidence of alleged corruption among city officials to the grand jury headed by Raymond F. Almirall.

Mr. Battle married on April 12, 1898, the former Miss Marha Bagby, daughter of Dr. George W. Bagby, of Richmond, former State librarian of Virginia. The Battles passed their vacations at their country home near Rapidan in Orange County, Va.

Mr. and Mrs. Battle had no children.

Woman Guard Shot Sues for $100,000

MRS. IRENE COSLETT
Asks damages

An Army officer's wife has sued the Government for $100,000 because she was wounded last November by a bullet said to have been fired as a warning by a guard at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

In her suit filed at U. S. District Court in Alexandria, Mrs. Beulah Irene Coslett said she was struck by a bullet the night of November 27 while sitting in her Arlington Farms apartment. The apartment is about 800 yards from the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery, she said.

At the time of the incident, an Army investigation showed that Pvt. William O'Connor fired two warning shots into the air at about that time, when someone passing nearby failed to obey his command to halt. The Army said he was acting under orders.

Mrs. Coslett, wife of Lieut. Robert T. Coslett, said the bullet struck her below the left knee, came out the back of her leg and penetrated her thigh.

The suit claimed she suffered "disfiguring and permanent injuries and scars." As a result of the wound, she says she suffered "permanent and complete loss of the use of her left foot so that she can walk only with the aid of a leg brace and supporting devices . . ."

2 Held in Baby Abandonment

Baltimore, April 30 (AP).—Detective headquarters announced today that a 21-year-old District of Columbia college student was being held in connection with the abandonment of a week-old girl here.

The infant was found April 1 on the steps of SS. Philip and James Convent. Nuns found pinned to a pink and white blanket a note which read:

"Please deliver the baby to St. Vincent's infant home. God bless you."

Detective Capt. Henry J. Kriss said that by means of a maternity bracelet, police found the baby was born in a Washington hospital on March 23.

The arrest of the student followed. He, and a young woman who was located in New Jersey, were scheduled to appear in Northern Police Court later in the day. Kriss said abandonment charges would be placed against them.

Father Charged

Boy, 9, Found Chained to Beam in Shed

Clark Holloway, a busboy who lives at 516 N. Alfred st., was charged with cruelty by Alexandria police yesterday after his son was found chained in a shed.

Released by officers who answered a phone call about 9 a. m. from another relative, 9-year-old Willie Holloway said his father had put him in the shed about 5 a. m. without breakfast as punishment for skipping half a day of school Thursday. The boy said his father went off to work after fastening the chains.

Police said they found the boy with one end of a chain fastened to his left ankle and the other end secured to an overhead beam. The rickety shed was in a chicken yard behind the boy's home.

Apparently none the worse for his experience, the boy skipped off for breakfast at a cousin's home, police said. Relatives said the boy's parents were separated and that he had been living with his father for seven years.

Holloway was ordered to appear in Juvenile Court at 2 p.m. Monday.

Prince Georges County Casts Slot Machine Vote in June

Residents of Prince Georges County, Md., will vote in June on whether to legalize cash-payoff slot machines.

The bill authorizing the referendum passed through both houses at Annapolis with scarcely any opposition and was signed by Gov. William Preston Lane, jr.

Supporters of the measure claim the county can realize about $200,000 annually in taxes if the slot machines are made legal. One of the county's delegates, Perry O Wilkerson, puts it this way:

"The machines are already there. Why shouldn't the county get some revenue from them?"

Lever Machine Barred

The conventional side-lever operated slot machine is outlawed in the bill. But it would be legal to set up electrically-operated slot machines of the "console" type.

The "console" type machine is usually waist high. Some of them operate as do the "one-armed bandits," with the traditional fruit and bar symbols. Others substitute names of horses.

There is no slot from which the coins pour when a hit is made. Instead, an automatic device lights up the number of "free games" due the player. Each "free play" can be translated into a five-cent payoff.

Residents of Prince Georges County may want to scan a new book just off the presses and determine what their chances are of beating the "console" slot machines if they are legalized.

The book is "You Can't Win." It is written by Ernest E. Blanche of 9409 Montgomery ave., North Chevy Chase, Md., and published by the Public Affairs Press of Washington.

By occupation, Blanche is chief statistician for the Logistics Division of the Army General Staff. By preoccupation, he is one of the country's chief debunkers of gambling.

There's no way to win at gambling, unless you bet yourself on games of solitaire, Blanche's studies have convinced him.

What does he say about the slot machines? Listen:

"Their daily 'take' reaches staggering proportions. About 80 to 90 per cent of what the players put into them is clear profit for the operator."

Blanche writes that a study by Prof. Philip G. Fox of the University of Wisconsin showed that the average player could lose $10 in 28 minutes on a dime machine.

'Expensive Exercise'

"If you were 'lucky,' you could play for an hour before losing your $10," says Blanche, "but if you were 'unlucky,' you could throw $10 away in seven minutes. At the average time of 28 minutes the cost of playing amounts to $21.60 an hour—which is pretty expensive exercise."

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

First-Quarter Earnings Indecisive

Despite (a) the unsatisfactory level of Easter sales, (b) the drop in business loans, (c) the decline in steel scrap, lead, zinc, and copper prices, and (d) the general uneasiness throughout industry, 1949 hasn't started off too badly—profitwise. But it hasn't started well, either.

Livingston

First-quarter reports show that the vast majority of industrial companies made money. Out of 226 companies in my tabulation, only 14 reported a loss. However, increases and decreases in profits over 1948 were a standoff: 113 companies reported a rise, 113 a drop

The biggest drops were in industries which have been in the dumps for quite some time, notably textile and apparel manufacturers, whose profits were off 45 per cent; retail stores, 55 per cent, and household equipment, down 60 per cent. Also down quite a bit were paper and pulp companies, 31 per cent, and oil, 23 per cent.

The industries which now are faring best may soon have their comeuppance. Iron and steel profits were unusually good in the first quarter, up 64 per cent over 1948. Yet Ernest T. Weir, chairman of National Steel, which also did unusually well, isn't optimistic about what's ahead. He said to shareholders:

"I'd hate to tell you how low the ingot rate will be by the end of the year, but I'm thinking along the lines of down to 75 per cent. I'm not predicting that. I am just giving that figure." That's a marked contraction from the current operating rate of 97.5 per cent, which is off from the extraordinarily high level of 102 per cent six weeks ago.

The steel industry, General Motors Corp., and Du Pont saved the first quarter. The 226 industrial companies reported a gain of 16 per cent over last year. If General Motors profits (up 42 per cent to the highest level on record) and Du Pont profits (up 44 per cent) are excluded from the tabulation—because they're so dominant—the overall increase would be only 7 per cent. And if the 18 iron and steel companies were also excluded the gain would vanish, profits would be down 5 per cent.

Utility companies (excluded from the totals) showed a gain of 29 per cent. Only 3 out of 32 utilities failed to improve on their 1948 first quarter.

Steel Is Wage Target

U. S. Steel reported profits up 79 per cent. Per share earnings of $5.01 were the highest since the third quarter of 1929. And the quarterly dividend was just boosted from $1.25 to $1.50 a share. Thus Big Steel offers a glaring target when Philip Murray's United Steel Workers' policy committee meets this week to draft wage demands. Actual negotiations over wages and pensions are due to start about June 15. The present contract expires July 15.

The following tabulation, though by no means fully representative of all industry, gives a fairly good idea of what happened in the first quarter. It shows the percentage change in profits, industry by industry, as compared with the first quarter of last year; also the number of companies in each group which reported an increase and a decrease. In two groups, household equipment and paper and pulp, all companies reported a decline from a year ago:

Industrial Prices Lower

Corporate earnings seem likely to get worse before they get better. Industrial prices have now been going down for five consecutive months following the earlier drop in farm prices (see shart). That implies that profit margins are being squeezed. Corporations must price competitively and strive to increase efficiency. More than that, inventory losses will put a crimp in income accounts. True, some companies have set up reserves against such declines; but in some cases the reserves will be insufficient.

The real test for business—and earnings—will come in the fourth quarter. Then the summer rush to buy automobiles will be over. The auto industry won't prop sales of steel companies. So, we'll be able to judge just how much current demand, as distinct from saved-up demand, underlies the market.

New York Cotton

New York, April 30 (AP).—Cotton futures closed firm today with gains of 20 to 60 cents a bale. The market opened firm and moved progessively higher. Buying was general and centered mostly in new-crop cotton deliveries.

Demand was stimulated by the Government mid-April parity cotton report which was unchanged from a month ago. Traders had anticipated a decline of about 12 points. Some said current prices for deferred deliveries are considered low and indicated a loan value of 29.60 cents a pound for middling 1⅛-inch cotton.

Some support also was attracted from reports of small loan repossessions, despite the recent advance in cotton prices to new highs for the season.

Liberty Bldg. Opens Monday In New Home

By S. Oliver Goodman

Liberty Building Association on Monday will open for business in its new building at 1407 G st. nw., President Edmond M. Emmerich announced yesterday.

Emmerich

Now in its fifty-ninth year, the institution previously was located at 511 7th st. nw., throughout its history. Rapid expansion in recent years "made it imperative that enlarged quarters be obtained and the erection of the new building was the answer," Emmerich said. Assets of the association currently are at an all-time high of 9½ million dollars.

At a press review Friday, Emmerich showed newsmen about the new quarters. Three stories high, the building has main offices on the ground floor. Basement has been arranged for recreation rooms, lunch and conference space.

On the mezzanine are the bookkeeping department and board room. Liberal use of stainless steel for trim gives the interior a clean-cut appearance.

Front is of limestone with granits trim. Ultramodern desk and counter design, plus an attractive and spacious layout give an attractive appearance. The building is air-conditioned and has modern lighting equipment.

Upper two floors have private offices and loft space and will be leased.

Emmerich, associated with the institution for the past 28 years, was elevated to president on April 13 this year.

IMPROVEMENT: Allied Chemical & Dye Corp.'s sales in the first quarter of 1949 were slightly in excess of the like period last year, President F. J. Emmerich, said recently. Emmerich told stockholders at the annual meeting that net income for the period also was somewhat higher. Emmerich said the directors had considered splitting the company's common stock, but believed there were several disadvantages to such a move. He said the cost of a stock split was high and that it also would cost stockholders more in brokerage commissions to buy and sell the split shares. Henry M. Minton, executive vice president of Church & Dwight Co., and Francis H. McAdoo, vice president of Allied Chemical, were elected to the board of directors.

SAGA ENDS: Guy W. Vaughan has retired as board chairman of Curtiss-Wright Corp., after nearly 33 years as a pioneer in the aviation industry. Originally a famous auto designer, motor builder and racing driver, Vaughan joined the old Wright Martin Co. in 1915 and built it up to a production record of 2000 engines a month. When the World War I shooting was over the owners, discouraged by aviation's peacetime nosedive, sold the company to a trucking outfit. Vaughan, however, salvaged the name of "Wright" and set up a small shop to develop airplane engines. He helped build this company up. When the depression of the early 1930's all but wiped out the consolidated Curtiss and Wright companies, Vaughan again salvaged what he could. He then began the development of Curtiss-Wright into an aeronautical enterprise that during the recent war delivered more than 5½ billion dollars worth of aircraft to the Allies. He also directed its peacetime reconversion. With that done, Vaughan is dropping out. At 65, he can look back on a job well done with few names to rank with his in America's flying history.

TELEPHONE NET: Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. reported a slight drop in March net income, but net for the first three months showed improvement over the same 1948 period. March net was $319,275, a dip of $3691 below the same month last year, while first-quarter net totaled $945,879, a gain of $61,113.

AOA REPORTS: American Overseas Airlines reported net income of $990,877 for last year compared with a loss of $1,773,200 in 1947. The company is controlled by American Airlines. The annual report said a credit agreement made with a group of 12 banks in 1947 for purchasing eight Boeing stratocruisers had been reduced from 12 million dollars to 10 million dollars because of lower cash requirements. The first of the eight stratocruisers is expected to be delivered next month and the first commercial flight in the new plane is planned for about October 15. The company's operating revenue last year was $23,537,458, an increase of $3,341,438 over 1947.

EARNINGS: The Atlantic Refining Co. and its subsidiaries reported net income of $7,729,027, equal to $2.73 a common share for the quarter ending March 31. This compares with $8,179,680, or $2.89 a share for the first three months of 1948. Other earnings statements follow:

Stock Gains Exceed Losses On Small Sales

New York, April 30 (AP).—The mildest of buying breezes carried the stock market forward today.

Most gains were fractional, some as large as a point or so. A good handful backed down a trifle and many issues were unchanged but the general tendency was upward.

The market was highly responsive to only modest demand. Turnover amounted to 310,000 shares, smallest total for the past five weeks, and compared with 340,000 a week ago.

Star performer was Richfield Oil, the most active issue traded. The price advanced more than a point at one time to a high for the year but closed at 37¼ for a net gain of ⅜. The stock has been a recent favorite, apparently in reflection of reports of favorable progress in drilling operations in the Cuyama oil field in California.

WHAT STOCKS DID	Sat.	Fri.
Advances	238	270
Declines	180	453
Unchanged	221	247
Total issues	639	970

Top prices for the year were also paid during the day for American Ice, up ⅞ at 7⅛, and Eversharp, up the same amount at 9¼.

United States Rubber, on the other hand, dropped to the year's low and closed at 37⅜, off ½ although a bit up from the low of the day.

Closing higher were United States Steel, Studebaker, Sears Roebuck, Liggett & Myers, American Telephone, Western Union, Consolidated Natural Gas, United Corp., Kennecott Copper, General Electric, Radio Corp., International Paper, Southern Pacific, Great Northern preferred, Gulf Oil and Twentieth Century-Fox.

On the other side were Goodrich, National Distillers, American Smelting, American Can, Eastman Kodak, United States Gypsum, Standard Oil (N. J.) and Pan American Airways.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks advanced .1 of one point to 63. The industrial, railroad and utility components all improved.

Curtis Furniture Firm Wins Award For 'Sleep Show'

Curtis Brothers Furniture Co., Nichols Ave. and V st. se., has won the plaque of The Washington Post for its "Sleep Show" display. The winning entry featured a window display, a well-developed display within the store and eye-catching advertising with a "Sleep Show" theme throughout.

The National Association of Bedding Manufacturers originated the competition on a national basis last year. The P. J. Nee Co. and Mazor Masterpieces were runners-up in the contest which was conducted from April 18 to 30.

The committee of judges consisted of Edward J. Raum, advertising manager of Chas. Schwartz & Son, jewelers; Norman E. Williams, advertising and display manager of Beckers Leather Goods Co., Inc., and Basil R. Littin, public relations consultant of Hill & Knowlton.

HOW TO GET AHEAD DURING THE NEXT 4 YEARS
A Word from
THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

The men who get ahead between now and 1953 will be those who know how to adapt themselves to changing conditions.

Some of the changes during the next four years will come from Washington, some from industry, and some from changing conditions abroad. It will be necessary for you to keep in close touch with these changes and, if possible, to have advance warnings of important new developments.

New Ways to Make Money

For example, new inventions, new industries, and new products or new methods of doing business will create new opportunities for men who want to increase their incomes. One way to find out about these is to read Business Bulletin, which appears every Thursday in The Wall Street Journal.

You should also keep informed on international conditions and on trends in the British Empire (which often foreshadow trends in the United States). A good way to do this is to read London Cable, which appears every Monday in The Wall Street Journal.

News from Washington

The news coming from Washington will have an important bearing on your future. If you want to know what is going on behind the scenes in Government, you should read Washington Wire, which appears every Friday in The Wall Street Journal.

Another important factor in your business future will be the price trends of raw materials and merchandise. Every week this information is published in Commodity Letter, which appears every Tuesday in The Wall Street Journal.

Your income tax situation may change with the future of Federal and State Tax developments, read Tax Report, which is published every Wednesday in The Wall Street Journal.

$20 Spent May Save You $2000

Every day The Wall Street Journal informs you promptly and reliably about things that affect your business and personal income. It gives you the facts relating to: Prices, Taxes, Inventories, Industries, Production Trends, Commodities, Securities, Marketing, Consumer Buying, World Trade and New Legislation.

Because The Wall Street Journal comes to you DAILY, you get the fastest possible warning of any new trend that may affect your business or personal income. The Wall Street Journal is the complete business DAILY. Has largest staff of writers on business and finance. The only business paper served by all four big press services. You can get a Trial Subscription for 3 months for $6—77 issues (in U. S. and Possessions). Just tear out this ad and attach check for $6 and mail. Or tell us to bill you. WP. 5-1

Chicago Grain

Chicago, April 30 (AP).—New crop wheat futures made fair-sized gains on the Board of Trade today, helped by failure of parity prices to decline in the past month and reports of dust storms in the western Canadian prairie provinces. May wheat held steady.

The rest of the grain market ended with prices mixed. Corn managed to eke out small fractional upturns. May oats met some fairly heavy selling pressure late in the day and dropped nearly a cent. Rye moved down on expectations of delivery of cash rye on May contracts Monday.

Wheat closed ⅛ to 1 cent higher, corn was ⅛@⅝ higher, oats were ⅞ lower to ⅜ higher, rye was 1¼@1½ lower, soybeans were ¾@1¼ higher and lard was 7 cents lower to 3 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Wheat parity on April 15 was announced at $2.17, unchanged from March 15. Some grain men had expected a decline. At the current parity, analysts estimated the loan here on 1949 cash wheat would equal about $2.25 a bushel. New crop wheat futures are selling more than 30 cents under that price.

According to official weather reports of the past 24 hours, very little precipitation was received in the wheat-growing areas of Canada. There have been reports from this territory of a need for rain. Temperatures ranged as high as 90 degrees in the area yesterday, with high winds creating numerous dust storms.

Packard Features No-Shift In Golden Anniversary Line

Detroit, April 30 (AP).—Packard Motor Car Co. disclosed details today of a new line of cars and a new no-shift transmission.

Outward styling of the new cars has not been drastically changed but many major design improvements are claimed by the manufacturer. Packard describes the new line as its golden anniversary models to commemorate its half century of auto building.

Prices are to be disclosed Monday and the new models will go on display in dealer showrooms shortly afterward.

George T. Christopher, Packard president, said the new transmission, named "ultramatic drive" is unique because a torque converter is used for acceleration and positive mechanical drive for cruising.

Packard, he said, hasn't given up hope of increasing its own output by 30 per cent this year. It built 98,897 vehicles last year and so far this year has turned out about 33,000.

Christopher said the new transmission will be offered initially as standard equipment on the Packard 160-horsepower custom eight models. Later, as production increases, it will be made available on the other models at additional cost.

The extra cost of the transmission was not disclosed immediately. Christopher said "it will be priced competitively" and added that putting it into production involved a seven-million-dollar retooling program.

Packard's new line of cars includes the 135-horsepower eights, on a 120-inch wheelbase; the 150-horsepower super eights, on 127-inch wheelbase and the 160-horsepower custom eights on a 127-inch wheelbase.

Besides increased horsepower in the eights and super eights, the new models have re-styled interiors, advanced sound-proofing, better ride and ease of handling, improved visibility, better braking and improved all-season heating and ventilation.

Peptic Ulcer Test Foretells Attack

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Atlantic City, N. J., April 30.—A laboratory test that tells whether or not a person may develop peptic ulcers was reported here today to the American Psychosomatic Society.

It wasn't the announcement of the new test, however, but the reasoning behind it that most excited members of this newest medical group. One society official termed the report "the first tangible proof of the validity of psychosomatic medicine."

The test, a simple urinalysis, was described by Dr. I. Arthur Mirsky, director of the May Institute for Medical Research, Cincinnati, Ohio. He had used it for almost two years in testing hundreds of persons, the healthy as well as the ill, he said.

By its use, he said, he has been able to prove that peptic ulcers, bane of harried businessmen, stem from "unconscious emotional conflicts" rather than from more obvious angers and anxieties.

Low Rate Hints Immunity

By analysis of timed specimens of urine, Dr. Mirsky said he found that persons with peptic ulcers showed a higher excretion rate of pepsinogens, digestive substances created in the stomach wall. Persons who do not show the righ rate are apparently immune.

Associate professor of both medicine and psychiatry at the University of Cincinnati Medical School, Dr. Mirsky said he turned to urinalysis to find the detection factor because previous research of stomach contents, such as samplings obtained by tubes to the stomach, were "to rough on the patient." Moreover, he said, such techniques were most likely to "create emotional factors of their own."

After establishing the quantitative differential, Dr. Mirsky said he sought out the emotional factors that might lead to the overproduction of pepsinogens. He was able to do this, he told the psychosomatists, through psychoanalysis guided by diaries kept by the volunteer subects.

These studies, he reported, showed that "inner, unknown conflicts of the emotions" rather than known alarms caused the stomach activity that precedes and accompanies peptic ulcers.

As an example, he told of one patient who had been practicing birth control measures and then abandoned them because he wanted a child.

"Resented Possibility"

"He really thought he wanted a child," explained Dr. Mirsky. "But by psychoanalysis it was later determined that he unconsciously resented the posibility of children, lest they take away some of his wife's dependence."

Beginning with the date of decision to have a child, Dr. Mirsky said, the pepsinogen output increased to the ulcer potential level. Subsequently, when other tests ruled out the probability of childbearing, the man's pepsinogen activity dropped to its former level, Dr. Mirsky reported.

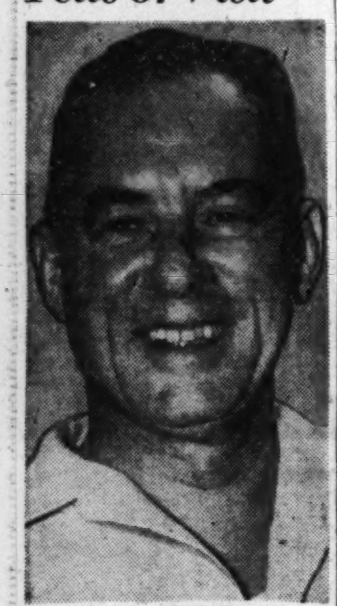
Not all persons with high pepsinogen activity are likely to develop stomach ulcers, Dr. Mirsky showed in his report. Alcoholics, petty larcenists and drug addicts, as groups, all show the activity to the ulcer potential level without a corresponding incidence in the rate of peptic ulcers, he said.

Any deductions from those findings must wait until later, he declared.

Dr. Ian Stevenson, of New York Hospital, New York, another speaker at today's session, told of research with electrocardiograms on patients under emotional stress. When questioned on subjects that touched their anxieties, resentments and feelings of guilt, he said, the patients showed reactions more markedly on the electrocardiograms than on normal observation.

Such tests, Dr. Stevenson said, show that evaluation of the emotional state may be helpful in electrocardiograph diagnosis, and that electrocardiograms may also be valuable in diagnosing emotional states.

Walter Reed's First Patient Tells of Visit



HOMER GREENFIELD
It was 40 years ago

Walter Reed Hospital will observe its fortieth anniversary today with little fanfare.

The occasion, however, will stir boyhood memories—about a strawberry patch and its consequences—for a Chevy Chase man in his 50s, the hospital's first patient.

He is Homer Greenfield, 509 Surry st., Chevy Chase, an administrator in the office of the Federal Security Administrator, Oscar Ewing.

Recalls Tearing Finger

The strawberry patch, Greenfield recalled yesterday, was near Georgia ave. and Butternut st. nw., where the hospital was nearing completion in 1908.

"I was only 11," he reminisced, "and like boys of that age, we were in the strawberry patch. Somebody yelled at us, and in jumping a barbed wire fence, I ripped the flesh off my right center finger."

In the shiny new operating room, a master hospital sergeant, who in those days could do almost anything, sewed the torn flesh back in place.

"I recall that strawberry patch every time I go back to Walter Reed," he said.

Conceived in Civil War

He was wounded in the Argonne during World War I, and has undergone treatment and minor operations at the Army's No. 1 hospital several times since.

Now a part of the Army Medical Center, Walter Reed was conceived in the Civil War. It opened for regular patients late in 1908 as the Post Hospital of the Army's Washington Barracks, but did not officially become Walter Reed General Hospital until May 1, 1909.

Its first patients were transported to the hospital in a steam-propelled ambulance, and in its first month it cared for 5 officers, 11 enlisted men and 1 civilian. Now, with 1900 beds, it admits more than 1200 patients a year and treats approximately 225,000 outpatients a year.

The hospital was named for Maj. Walter Reed, Army medical officer whose research in 1900 and 1901 proved a mosquito, Stegomyia fasciata, transmitted yellow fever.

Boy Gaining After Liver Operation

Arlington Hospital yesterday reported the unusual case of a boy who was run over by a tractor, had part of his liver removed in an emergency operation and is now making a satisfactory recovery.

A week ago yesterday when Jerry Jasper, almost 4, was brought to the hospital, doctors frankly dildn't give him much chance. The rear wheel of a tractor at his Fairfax County home had passed completely over his body, splitting open his liver.

Doctors explained that a torn liver is usually repaired by stitching it up. But in Jerry's case the tear was so great that nearly a quarter of the liver, "a piece as big as a baseball" had to be removed.

Operations to remove a part of the liver are rarely undertaken except in case of cancer, doctors said. When opened, the liver appears as just "a mass of blood," they said, and the great danger from a break is that the patient will quickly bleed to death.

Doctors think Jerry's life may have been saved by the fact that he immediately went into a state of shock. This would lower the blood pressure, they said, and slow down the circulation of blood through the body. The wound was internal with no break in the skin.

After the operation, bleeding was checked by applying fibrin foam to the exposed part of the liver. This is a by-product of blood plasma which aids in clotting the blood, doctors explained.

Doctors said the loss of part of his liver won't hurt Jerry a bit. He'll probably have to spend his fourth birthday next Friday at the hospital. But he is expected to be able to go home in a couple of weeks.

One doctor said of the operation and its outcome: "It's one you like to remember."

Jerry is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jones D. Jasper, who live near Fairfax Station. His father owns the Bernall-Jasper Fence Co. at 12th st. and Brentwood rd. ne.

Mrs. Jasper said a worker on their farm was backing the tractor out of the barn when the accident happened. Jerry had climbed on the back of it, she said, lost his balance and fell backward under a rear wheel.

Jackson Announces Rift With Russians

By Howard L. Dutkin
Post Reporter

A major obstacle to world peace is the Rusian viewpoint that courts of law should be subordinate to political interests, Associate Justice Jackson of the Supreme Court said last night.

This belief, the jurist told about 200 members of the American Society for International Law at the Carlton Hotel, stands in the way of finding "a common meeting ground" for East and West.

Howeiver, Jackson said, there is "a great body of opinion" in Russia that might be amenable to western concepts of law.

"If we could establish communications . . . between the professions of the two countries free from political sparring, I think we would find a great deal of common ground . . . I don't know if enough common ground, but certainly we would take advantage of it to understand them better and they to understand us better."

"For a long time," Jackson said, "it came to be regarded as international law that which had been accepted by the Western World as international law—not very much account was taken of opinion outside the circle of nations that made up western civilization.

"Now we face a situation where the balance of power has so shifted that we must take into account views of people whose views had not counted for so much."

Jackson said the time has passed when we could view the world as "one world." "I don't suppose it was ever true in any sense except that of geography," he declared.

The speaker cited the difference in basic traditions of the East and the West as a barrier to finding a common agreement on codification of laws.

"They (the Russians) are handicapped in starting so far behind," he said. "They come . . . without any tradition of freedom, without a Declaration of Independence, without a Rights of Man, without heroes who are heroes because they fought for liberty. There is an authoritarian background."

Another speaker at the closing banquet of the three-day session was James N. Landis, former dean of Harvard Law School. Landis cited progress in international law despite lack of force to back up signed agreements.

Earlier, members of the society elected Manley O. Hudson, chairman of the U. N. International Law Commission, as president to succeed Charles Cheney Hyde, Columbia University professor of International Law.

George A. Finch, of Washington, counsellor of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, was re-elected vice president.

Also elected as vice presidents were Edwin O. Dickinson, University of Pennsylvania law professor, and Philip C. Jessup, U. S. Ambassador at large to the U. N.

Secretary of State Acheson was elected honorary president.

During the afternoon session, the society passed a motion offered by Attorney Louis B. Wehle of New York that a committee be appointed to study the attitude of the United Nations in cases where member states challenging the competency of the U. N., move that the competency question be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Virginia Unit Opposes Race Bar in AAUW

The Virginia State Association of the American Association of University Women is opposed to segregation within the organization, it was disclosed in a ballot taken yesterday for the guidance of the State division's delegate to the national convention to be held in Seattle in June.

An overwhelming majority of the 87 voting delegates at a meeting held on the second day of a two-day convention expressed disapproval of race discrimination in a vote instructing the State president, Dr. Mildred Taylor, to vote against discrimination in the national convention.

A by-law that would make it mandatory for all branches of the AAUW to accept all members eligible for the association by virtue of having a degree from one of the colleges acredited by the AAUW will be under consideration at the June convention. An amendment permitting the branches some latitude in the matter of accepting members was not accepted.

Greetings were presented to the group, which included about 100 members in addition to the voting delegates, by officers of the International Fellowship Committee, which was meeting concurrently at the national headquarters of the AAUW at 1634 I st. nw., where the Virginia division also met yesterday morning.

At the luncheon meeting, held in the Terrace Room of the National Airport, which closed the two-day convention, the speaker was Dr. Kathryn McHale, executive director of national headquarters.

AAUW members should bear in mind that "only the educated are free," Dr. McHale said, and should assume the responsibility for orienting new members to that way of thinking.

At the first day's sessions Friday, new officers, except for the president, whose two-year term has a year to run, were elected.

Mrs. Truman Democratic Group Guest

Mrs. Harry S. Truman was honor guest at the spring luncheon of the Democratic Women's National Council, held yesterday to celebrate the council's twentieth anniversary.

Among the more than 500 members and guests who gathered at the Mayflower Hotel were several women whose husbands are prominent in official circles, and a few of the men themselves.

At the head table with Mrs. Truman and the Council president, Mrs. Walter H. Maloney, were Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Charles F. Brannan; Mrs. Tom Clark, wife of the Attorney General; Mrs. Jesse M. Donaldson, wife of the Postmaster General; Mrs. Max Truitt, whose father is Vice President Barkley; Mrs. Julius A. Krug, wife of the Secretary of the Interior; Mrs. Charles G. Ross, wife of the President's press secretary; Melvin Hildreth, Democratic National Committeeman from the District; the Rev. Russell A. Phelan of the Church of the Annunciation, who gave the invocation; Russell Chapin, whose wife sang after the luncheon, and Mrs. Helen K. Rand.

On the program with Rosamond Chapin was Edward Dudley, who joined her in selections from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" sung in English. Dr. Paul Weiner was at the piano. Both singers came from Boston for the occasion, and Dr. Weiner from New York.

Among the other guests were Mrs. Leslie L. Biffle, wife of the Secretary of the Senate; Mrs. Wallace Graham, whose husband is White House physician; Mrs. Clinton Anderson, wife of the Senator from New Mexico; Mrs. Carlos P. Romulo, wife of the Philippine Delegate to the United Nations; Mrs. Clark M. Clifford, wife of the Special Counsel to the President, and Mrs. John R. Steelman, wife of the Assistant to the President.

In charge of the program was Mrs. Esterlene Bell. Mrs. Floyd L. Cook handled tickets. On the hostess committee were Mrs. Woodrow Grim, Mrs. Anne T. Kelley, Mrs. Byron N. Scott, Miss Helen McNulta, Mrs. Naomi Donahey and Dr. Minerva Martin.

Northumberland's Johnson Enters GOP Governor Race

Walter Johnson, 53-year-old Commonwealth's attorney of Northumberland County, yesterday became the first candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor of Virginia in the 1949 election.

The announcement came as another political development saw Nick Prillaman abandon his campaign for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination to align himself with the ticket of Francis Pickens Miller as aspirant for the lieutenant governorship.

Prillaman, mayor of Martinsville, was immediately made welcome by Miller's anti-organization contingent. Miller himself said he was "encouraged and pleased."

Thus the last candidate to announce for the nomination became the first to drop out. Prillaman tossed his hat into the ring February 24. Miller, State Senator John S. Battle, Horace H. Edwards and Remmie L. Arnold still are in the fight.

Prillaman already has two opponents for the lieutenant governorship, including the incumbent, L. Preston Collins, and Dr. E. W. Senter of Salem.

The announcement of Johnson's candidacy was made in Richmond by Tyrrell Krum, chairman of the Fairfax County GOP.

Johnson was elected Commonwealth's attorney two years ago. He is the first Republican ever to be elected to a high office in the First Congressional District, where Democrat S. Otis Bland has been Representative for many years.

Krum, in making the announcement, said that Johnson is a GOP nominee in "response to the demand of Republicans all over the State."

Johnson, his wife and their daughter, Beverley, reside six miles from Heathsville. A native of Minneapolis, Minn., Johnson is of Danish descent. The strapping six-foot three-inch Scandinavian moved to Arlington County in 1932 and was admitted to the Virginia bar in 1934. He lived in Arlington until 1942, when he moved to Northumberland County.

Johnson received both his bachelor and master of laws degrees from Northeastern University Law School, Boston, Mass. He founded the Regular Veterans Association in 1934 and served as its national commander in 1934, 1935 and 1936.

Approximately 1200 persons got an inside look at six foreign embassies, opened to the public yesterday from 2 to 5 p. m., for the benefit of the Goodwill Industries here.

Mrs. Truman was among those who took part in the tour, sponsored by the Women's Guild of Goodwill Industries, and covering the embassies of the Philippines, Australia, Panama, Turkey and Egypt, plus the Legation of Switzerland.

The First Lady appeared at the home of Mrs. Martin Vogel, 2601 30th st. nw., where tea was served from 4 to 5:30 p. m.

Despite the arrest of eight suspected safecrackers during the past week, yeggs still are keeping police busy.

Their latest score was the theft of between $1200 and $1500 from the safe of the Sun Valley Products Co., wholesale poultry and eggs firm, at 222 7th st. se.

Maryland Is Proving State Can Solve Health Problems Without Federal Aid

SECURITY in health is one aspect of the general problem of social security. There are certain principles on which most forward looking people agree. We wish to see all people have medical care, irrespective of economic status or where they live. We want this medical service to be of the highest quality and so organized that the progress in medical science will be rapidly funneled to every community. It is also agreed that prevention is better and cheaper than cure and that preventive methods must precede or go hand in hand with a curative program.

The administrative, economic and medical aspects of a national health program are inseparable. Any economic plan will defeat its own objectives if it results in mediocre medical protection. The best medical plan will collapse if it is not soundly financed. The key to the best medical services at the lowest expenditure of our economic resources, depends upon administration. And basic to all three aspects of a national program is the development of sufficient medical personnel and facilities.

Since these principles are today generally accepted, the most practical approach to their implementation is not through the ideological battle in which our political leaders and the American Medical Association are indulging, but through a factual analysis of existing public and voluntary programs and the application of this experience to the larger issue of State-wide and Nation-wide systems of health services. The highest responsibility of our democracy is to show creative imagination in solving its acute social problems. But in finding solutions that fit our own people, our own political institutions and our own resources, experience is a safer guide to progress than theoretical blueprints for mass salvation by government fiat borrowed from other nations.

The strength of our situation is that we still have an opportunity to experiment with grass-root programs under widely differing conditions. It is far safer for us to prolong this experimental stage than to take any dramatic step toward a Nation-wide solution of our health problems on insufficient evidence of its permanent value.

As one contribution to a clarification of our thinking on health protection, its organization, per capita cost, and other realistic considerations of the many problems involved, these articles by Agnes E. Meyer will report on the Maryland State and the Baltimore City medical care programs.

Mrs. Meyer has made a careful study of this subject, and we feel has made an important contribution to factual knowledge on Public Health planning.—THE EDITORS.

I

MARYLAND is giving the Nation convincing proof that a State can solve its own health problems without Federal aid. It is demonstrating in every county and city that local initiative, voluntary cooperation and citizen participation are the most powerful elements for constructive and efficient action upon which our democracy can count to solve its acute social problems.

Moreover, this State health plan proves that our medical leaders are in a better position than anyone else to mobilize and coordinate the forces involved in the achievement of a practical health program responsive to our ever-varying social and economic conditions. This decentralized program has in fact achieved more than an improvement in health conditions. It has brought about an education in the understanding of community organization and in the use of cooperative endeavor for the common good.

The Maryland plan, in existence 3½ years, is past the stage of blueprints, theory and planning. It is a smoothly functioning, constantly expanding State-wide organization which has been thought out on such sound principles that they can be adapted to the conditions that exist in a majority of our States. I chose the experiments being made in Maryland because they are adapted to varied rural and semi-rural conditions as well as those of a large city that happens to have two outstanding medical centers, which have contributed their knowledge, talents and prestige to the origin and evolution of the program.

My report will describe the organization and the results achieved for the counties by the Bureau of Medical Services, established by legislative enactment under the State department of health in 1945, and a somewhat different plan established in 1947 for complete medical care of relief clients with the medical care section of the health department of the City of Baltimore.

Suggested by Doctors

THE State-wide plan, now in operation for 3½ years, was initiated in 1939 by the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland (the State medical society), which proposed in an open letter that "a new section or standing committee of the State Planning Commission be constituted, whose function it shall be to keep under constant survey the problems of medical care for the citizens of this State and to formulate from time to time recommendations for better utilization and for extension of existing facilities, and for the institution of such new facilities as are required." In other words, the doctors of Maryland not only suggested the State health plan, but accepted full responsibility for its organization, its efficiency, the quality of its services and its continuous improvement.

How did this come about? The cooperation of Maryland's medical profession with the public health departments is a long-standing tradition. Dr. Robert H. Riley, State health commissioner, has used great wisdom over many years in his relationship with the medical profession. And the traditional interest of the doctors in public health is exemplified by such noteworthy achievements as the purification of Baltimore's water system under the leadership of Johns Hopkins' famous Dr. William Welch some 50 years ago.

It was this sense of responsibility for the general health of the people which prompted Dr. Harry E. Sigerist, professor of history of medicine at Johns Hopkins University, to call a meeting in May, 1939, of an all-Maryland health conference. More than 100 civic, labor, rural, educational, religious and other voluntary groups were represented.

The learned doctor did not foresee what explosive materials he was mixing in this social test tube. The conference practically blew up. The labor leaders shook their fists under the noses of the medical dignitaries who were present and declared they would never again pay a medical bill. The government would have to do it. The fiery meeting proved conclusively that the people were seething with rage over the medical care they were getting, and that a bitter

Wondrous Shanghai Rose From Mud

By Herbert Elliston

Editor, The Washington Post

MANY hours before the traveler reaches Shanghai he finds that the ocean waters lapping his steamer have developed the muddy yellow color that marks the mouth of the Yangtze-kiang, known to the Chinese as "the Great River." This aggregation of turbid fresh water is saturated with the loam of fields 1500 miles away.

Much of its earthy element is brought down from the great mountain ranges of central Asia, where the Yangtze disputes with the Ganges, the Brahmaputra, the Mekong and the Yellow River for Asia's drainage. The volume of the Yangtze is increased by every mountain torrent and every descending streamlet through three quarters of a million square miles of the old Middle Kingdom.

The great port of Shanghai is situated on a feeder of the Yangtze estuary called the Whangpu, which is little more than a tidal channel, penetrating some 40 miles into the interior, where it helps to drain off the waters accruing from the complicated network of interior lakes. A few centuries ago this river barely existed, and much of the countryside north and east of Shanghai is the growth of the last 300 years.

In fact, the whole of the province of Kiangsu, in the extreme east of which Shanghai is situated, is made up of the silt brought down by the "Great River" on its tumultuous career from the ranges of central Asia. Its almost exclusively alluvial soil marks it out from the remaining divisions of China as a garden of abounding fertility. Once it was covered by the erratic waters of the Yangtze, from which it was won by the conjoint efforts of nature and 60 generations of human toilers. The area altogether conquered in this way is equivalent to half England.

Marco Polo Vindicated

THE Kiangsu plain is broken occasionally by isolated hills, and is intersected by countless waterways and great chains of lakes. From it almost all our earliest notions of the fertility, dense population, crowded cities, and refined luxuries of China have been drawn.

Five centuries ago Marco Polo witnessed in this province wonders rarely credited till they had been verified by recent generations. Here, 200 years later, the Jesuit missionaries, beginning with St. Francis Xavier, fresh from the squalid cities and barbarous societies of Europe, admired and described for incredulous readers the wonders of an ancient and ingenious civilization. And here a patient peasantry have cultivated their rice and busied themselves with the manufacture of silk from a period long antecedent to the Christian era. Their industry has given rise to cities whose origin dates back to the dawn of history and which cluster in close proximity in every part of the exuberant terrain.

The establishment of a trading post in Shanghai was scarcely thought of until the hostile operations of 1841 led a British [illegible] and military expedition to the mouth of the Yangtze, where Admiral Parker and Sir Hugh Gough amused themselves by knocking down such Chinese fortifications as came in their way. One of the victims of this undignified mode of warfare was Shanghai, and when the Treaty of Nanking was signed in 1842, it was included among the four ports thrown open to trade in addition to Canton. In 1843 Captain Balfour arrived for the purpose of establishing both a factory, as the old trading posts were called, and a consulate for the British traders.

As with most other foreign settlements in China, the "ghetto" designated for "barbarian" residence was a mudbank. Marshy waste ground along the bank of the river was bought up at low prices from the Chinese owners, on whose former holdings of reed-beds, paddy field or garden patch arose the hongs of British firms. These hongs increased in size with the years until they vied with those of Calcutta, the city of business palaces. Attracted by the possibilities of the trade in silk, foreigners other than British found their way to this thriving trading post.

Precious Real Estate

THE "ghetto" did not belie the vision of the early settlers. On steel piles driven into the mud, international Shanghai grew into the fourth among world ports, with a six million population. Its river front now looks out on the flags of a dozen nationals. That front is called the Bund, one of the world's richest thoroughfares, which, bought for a song, has been quoted as high as $500,000 an acre.

Here have arisen buildings majestic enough to brace any metropolis. Shanghailanders—a description reserved for the tiny minority of foreigners, who include 4000 British and 2500 Americans—are justly proud of showing them off. This is the best this, that is the best that, until one gets to the Shanghai Club, where the bar is pointed out, "the longest in the world, don't y' know." At the pre-tiffin, or pre-lunch, hour it is thronged three deep with prosperous looking t'aip'ans, or merchant princes. Shanghai is obviously well east of Suez; more obviously it is one of the wealthiest communities in the world.

It is this wonder city where East and West meet that is now awaiting anxiously the coming of the Communists. Whether it will be by-passed, pillaged or allowed to go to wrack and ruin—this is the question that Shanghailanders are now asking.

Dispirited Navy Raises Some Questions

Editor's Note: This article presents one point of view on the super-carrier controversy. A subsequent article will deal with the arguments that have persuaded the Joint Chiefs of Staff to recommend the scrapping of plans for the giant flat top.

By John G. Norris

Post Reporter

THE United States Navy was rocked a week ago by the order killing its super-carrier.

In a sense, the order to abandon construction of the new 65,000-ton aircraft carrier United States hurt more than the heaviest enemy attacks the American fleet has survived on the seven seas.

The latter crippled only for the moment. Defense Secretary Louis Johnson's directive inflicted permanent damage.

It was not just the loss of a major new ship. The decision has far-reaching ramifications only now becoming apparent to the rank and file of Navy men.

First, it bars the Navy from further development of its most powerful weapon—a weapon forged between World Wars I and II and proved to be eminently successful in the war against Japan. It seems almost incomprehensible to Navy partisans that many top American officials now talk of the "champ" of four years ago as if it were a hasbeen.

Second, the morale of the carrier task force has been badly damaged.

Third, from top to bottom, men of the naval service see last week's action as the handwriting on the wall for the historic concept of a self-contained sea service—with its own shore bases, aviation and landing forces (Marines).

Hailed As An Economy

TO DATE, most of the editorial writers and pundits have commended the move—largely on the grounds of economy, unity of command and elimination of duplication in the military services.

There also has been much armchair experting of military principles and some confusion of statement as to (1) the legality of both building and abandoning the carrier; (2) whether or not it was ever approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and (3) whether the Navy and the Air Force have been guilty of shady practice, propaganda and misrepresentation of facts and figures in their releases, canned speeches and sponsored articles on the air power argument.

Lack of official candor, and the super-carrier vs. B-36 fight, made such confusion almost inevitable.

It may well be that the decision to drop the flush-deck carrier was a sound one. Certainly, it was made by the Defense Secretary with consent of the President, and apparently on the advice of a majority of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Logic tells us that there should be economy in eliminating a costly new flattop—possible prototype of a fleet of them—and in concentrating our defense investment in one strategic air force, if economy was the question.

Moreover, if the top military advisors to the President and Defense Secretary are definitely opposed to the construction of the United States, that is enough for most Americans, because it's a technical military problem.

Bradley Was Supporter

BUT WE don't know, officially, just what was the stand of General Eisenhower, chairman of the Joint Chiefs, and of the three other members, Gen. Omar Bradley, Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg and Admiral Louis Denfeld.

Unofficially, some reporters learned that the latter three voted two to one for stopping work on the carrier, with the Army and Air Force representatives opposing the Navy member. But a year ago Bradley supported the flattop. What changed his mind, if it is changed? And while "Ike" has no vote, his views are highly valued. What are they?

Further, JCS procedure used to require a unanimous vote—much criticized in some quarters. What has happened in this instance? Was there a "split decision," which under the old procedure was decided by the Defense Secretary? Or does majority rule now prevail?

Much of this is of little interest to the man in the street. It is something to be left to the constituted authorities. The same goes for the question of whether the big carrier ever was legally authorized or was "slipped by" Congress. Or was Johnson's action in stopping construction after Congress ordered work begun, itself illegal?

Veteran Senators and Congressmen charged with legislating and appropriating for the defense forces are in sharp disagreement on all these points. No one seems sure of the law and the views of the uniformed chiefs, though many have set views on the military worth and probable cost of the super flattop.

Yet both the Senate and House Armed Forces Committees have voted against an immediate investigation. Members of the House group plan to look into the matter whenever pending legislation to amend the Unification Act passes the Senate and House hearings are held. The bill would give the Defense Secretary more power over the armed forces than he now has.

Navy Deserves Hearing

AS PERSUASIVE as are the arguments for canceling the super carrier—(1) saving 43 millions next year and much greater sums in future years; (2) concentrating our effort in one strategic air force; (3) following the leadership of the Joint Chiefs, Defense Secretary and White House—Navy partisans feel the question warrants a thorough Congressional review.

Not only should the country be given more definite answers on the questions now in dispute, but the consequences of the largely ignored threats to the Navy should be explored, they declare.

Many Congressmen and newsmen have an idea that the super carrier was a special ship designed largely to launch B-29 type bombers carrying an A-bomb. Opponents declare that it would be a costly and largely useless duplication of the Air Force's B-36s, partly because the planes could not land on the flattop.

Actually the United States was planned to carry new jet attack planes capable of performing normal naval air missions with much greater efficiency than now and also deliver A-bombs if desired. Such aircraft would take off and land just as do present carrier planes.

While Air Force officers accuse the Navy of "trying to get into the atomic bomb act," the following also cannot be disputed:

Since the beginning of flight, airplanes have been getting larger and heavier. Consequently, their landing fields—whether land runways or carriers—have had to be increased progressively in size.

The trend still continues, and unless the Navy is permitted to build ever more powerful planes—for its normal naval warfare purposes—it will soon be at a fatal disadvantage against land-based air power.

A Sore Point

SINCE THE birth of aviation, the question of land-based vs. sea-based airplanes has been a sore point. From Billy Mitchell's day, the Air Corps claimed that its bombers made warships obsolete. Naval airmen answered that their carrier planes could defeat or drive off such attacks.

The issue never has been settled definitely. At Pearl Harbor, carrier-based Jap planes sank anchored United States warships which had no fighter cover. The Prince of Wales had no air protection. Land-based B-17s went scoreless at the Battle of Midway.

Now, if land-based warplanes are to be built at any size, but carrier-based planes are to be limited, inevitably the latter will lose the historic contest at some future date. And it is no academic problem that is at stake. The carrier-based planes inevitably will be American and the land-based superior craft those of an enemy.

Why does cancellation of the 65,000-ton flattop mean limitation of the size of carrier-based planes? Just as B-36s and B-47s cannot operate from many airfields in the United States, so the newer Navy planes now coming along cannot be employed efficiently on present carriers.

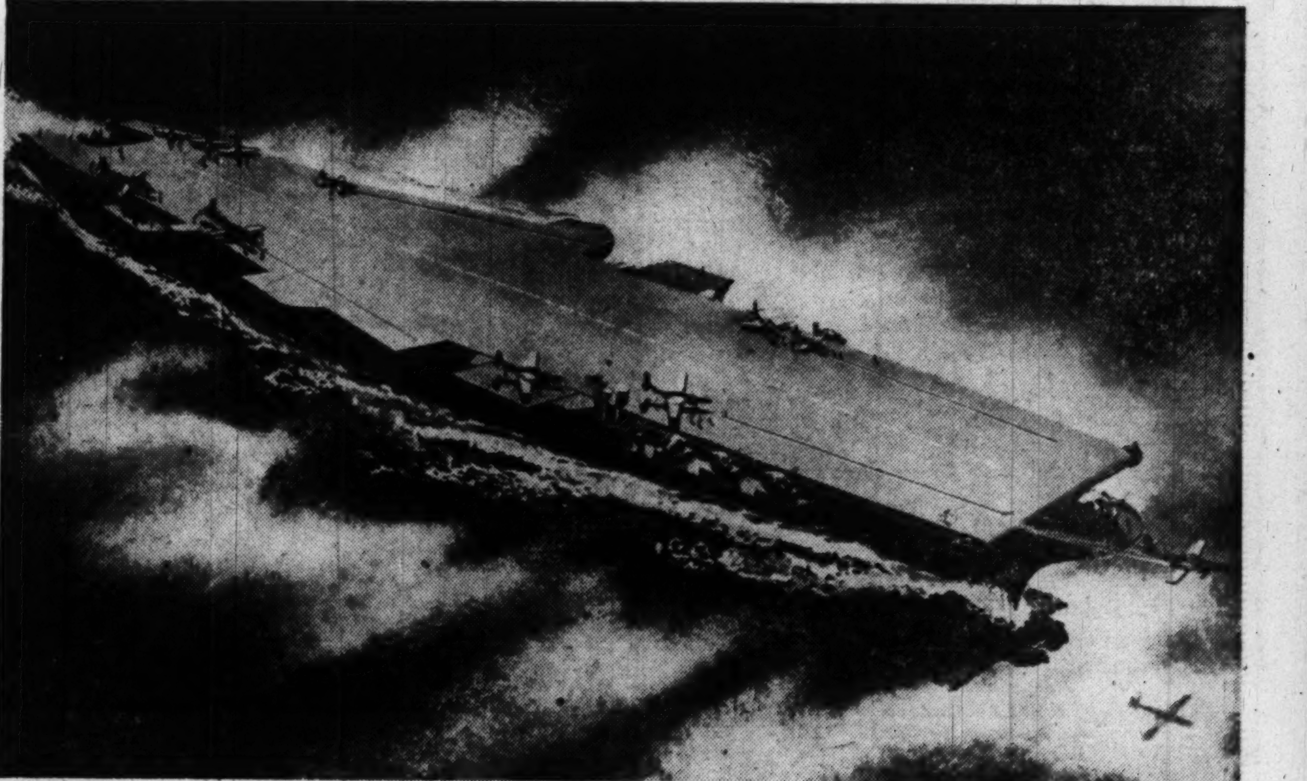
The new North American A2J attack plane can be operated from the 45,000-ton Midway class of carrier; but not from modernized Essex flattops. (We have only three of the Midways and a host of the Essexes.) A still newer plane, quite like the USAF B-47—jet bomber with the swept-back wings—was planned for the USS United States.

It could operate from the Midway or Essex carriers only in limited numbers, because it would not go down into those vessels' hangar decks.

This airplane would have an operating radius of 1700 miles, carrying an A-bomb or comparable payload. Therefore, the carrier it operated from could stay out in deep, unmined, unrestricted waters, and send its planes at assigned targets—enemy submarine pens, invasion beaches, hostile bases, etc.—and its planes could return.

If we limit the size of carriers in any future war to present size, however, our flattops must go in close to shore, or into restricted waters like the Mediterranean and Baltic Seas, to launch and recover their haltered-in-size-and-power planes. Planes and carriers would have to face the unrestricted land-based fighters and bombers of the future.

It is not so much this prospect of danger and bad odds which affects the morale of the Navy squadrons. Rather it is the expectation that naval aviation has no future, that newer and better Navy airplanes cannot—by fiat—be developed and that the Nation does not value their services.



How the controversial carrier would have looked under way . . . An architect's drawing of the proposed U. S. S. United States

Proud Lapps Have Never Been Nation

By Daniel De Luce
Associated Press Staff Writer

TROMSO, Norway.—The little old lady wears baby reindeer skin at her throat instead of lavender and old lace. She has never read a book in her own language—only four or five have been printed since Gutenberg invented his press—but she can juggle figures in her head as quickly as a banker. She has outwitted more than one city slicker.

She strolls through Tromso in wooly jacket and baggy pants more dazzling than the Northern Lights, her dog at her heels. She replies to the respectful bows of society matrons, for she has a born sense of noblesse oblige. Yet Tromso, to her, is an upstart village with barely 100 years of history. Her forefathers camped here as long ago, possibly, as the Stone Age.

Her people have never been a nation. They have produced no kings or presidents, aggressions or wars. Their contribution to the world has been limited to an example of pastoral simplicity and peace.

A Humiliating Name

THE LITTLE old lady is Margrete Kitti, proud Lapp. At 62, she is a grandmother, owner of a herd of 500 reindeer, mistress of rugged mountains and sweet valleys on the Norwegian coastal island, Kvaloy.

Like other Lapps, she hates the name, Lapp, which Nordic intruders applied as early as the year 900 to a gentle, friendly folk they kicked around and occasionally enslaved.

As Mrs. Kitti knows, Lapp meant simpleton. Her people call themselves "Samis." They are scattered in four countries and yet their number is only 31,000. Norway has 20,000, Sweden 7000, Finland 2000 and Russia 2000. Lapland extends from the North Sea to the Arctic Ocean, and frontiers never meant much to its people.

Inhabiting the cold, northern rooftop of Europe, the Lapps are the shortest race on the continent and have the most mysterious origin. Their unwritten language bears some resemblance to Finnish and Magyar. Some scientists, after measuring their skulls, have decided the Lapps belong to a Mongolian family.

They average 5 feet in height, usually have bandy legs, their eyes are small and piercing but not oblique, and frequently their hair is blonde.

Lapps without exception are Christians. Generations ago they were converted by Scandinavian Lutherans and Slavic Catholics, the religion depending on where they were encamped at the time. They preserve much nature lore.

Their two most important villages, Karasjok and Kautokeino in Arctic Norway, do not exceed 1500 in population. Both were burned to the ground by the German army in 1944.

Hunters, fishermen and herdsmen by tradition, they take to farming when necessity compels them. The trend is all in that direction now as mechanical civilization, cold war barriers and other aspects of modern Europe encroach on them.

Reindeer Are Profitable

THEIR ECONOMY is founded on the reindeer. It affords them transportation, clothing, footgear, milk, money, meat and companionship.

High meat prices since the war have put many Lapps on easy street and allowed them to cultivate a taste for luxuries like radio sets. Norway excludes reindeer steaks from rationing, and they bring as much as 85 and 90 cents a pound.

Mrs. Kitti's 500 reindeer are just like money in the bank.

Distressed that nobody has helped the Lapps to develop their written language for many years, Mrs. Alf Wiig, wife of the director of Lutheran churches in the Norwegian north and former president of Karasjok, is now preparing an illustrated Lapp grammar, speller and reader. Only two are known to have been written before, and are sadly out of date. The Bible and hymn collections have been translated into Lappish, but virtually nothing else.

Mrs. Wiig, as a parson's wife, reluctantly admits that the Lapps have a weakness for strong drink, and would be drinking more if alcohol were served over the counter in the north instead of coming by mail from package stores in the south.

Mrs. Wiig also says the Lapps think it great sport to rustle reindeer from one another. But at Karasjok, they have never touched anything belonging to the 50 Norwegians settled in their midst.

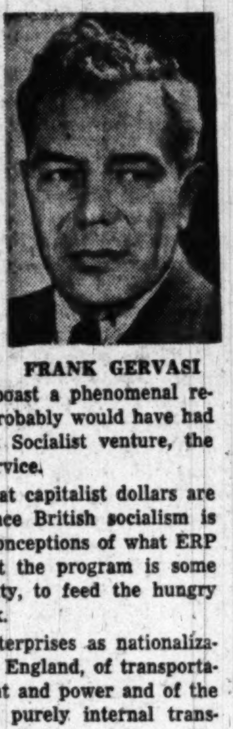
ERP Hasn't Financed Socialization

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

LONDON, April 30.—There may be good reasons for reducing Marshall aid to Europe for the next 15 months, but one often advanced in Congress, that nations like Britain are using European Recovery Program dollars to spur socialism, does not appear to be among them.



FRANK GERVASI

Had it not been for Marshall aid, of which Britain received $1,316,000,000 last year and is asking 940 million dollars for the next, the Labor government might not have been able to boast a phenomenal recovery record. It probably would have had to delay its biggest Socialist venture, the National Health Service.

But the notion that capitalist dollars are being used to finance British socialism is one of several misconceptions of what ERP is. Another is that the program is some sort of relief activity, to feed the hungry and succor the sick.

Such Socialist enterprises as nationalization of the Bank of England, of transportation, of electric light and power and of the coal industry were purely internal transactions involving sterling, not dollars. Nationalization of the bank, which was little more than the creation of a British version of our own Federal Reserve System, was accomplished by issuance of 232 million dollars in government bonds to the former stockholders.

So it was with the other enterprises which were transferred by the government from private to public ownership. The shareholders received stocks and bonds paying from 2½ to 3 per cent interest. No dollars changed hands.

The evidence is that Marshall aid has slowed up rather than accelerated British socialization. Without it, the resultant chaotic conditions would have encouraged far more Marxist experimentation with the nation's economy than is now the case.

UNRRA a Lifesaver

BUT to understand what might have happened in Britain—and the rest of Europe—had it not been for Marshall aid, we must go back and examine the situation as it existed at the end of World War II. Then it looked as though Hitler's prophecy that when he fell he would take Europe with him to a hell of communism might be realized.

Thanks to the 20 million tons of food, fuel, medicine, machinery and raw materials poured into Europe by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration immediately after the war, Europe began to revive. European eyes began to turn westward toward America, whose taxpayers pay for two thirds of the UNRRA help, and away from Moscow.

Smoke poured from factory chimneys again. Wheels turned. The throngs of unemployed grew smaller. A semblance of economic vitality and stability was restored. But hunger, disease, joblessness still prevailed. Europe needed more food and fuel, more steel and more machinery, railway cars and tractors, fertilizers and a thousand other things.

Europeans needed more of those goods than they were able to produce or to obtain in trade for their own products. The war had destroyed or damaged normal sources. The only possible supplier was America and, to a smaller degree, Canada.

But to buy from America, dollars were needed. Together, America and Canada poured more than eight billion dollars in cash and credit into the tills of Britain, France and others to keep them buying. Still it wasn't enough. The buyers used up the loans and drained their own reserves of dollars and gold. By August, 1947, Britain, richest of all the war victims, was near the bottom of the barrel.

A Break in Rhythm

IN LANCASHIRE, the rhythm of the spindles and looms of the cotton mills slowed. Cotton stocks were down, and cotton could only come from the United States. Britain's big electrical supply industry was crying out for copper, another "dollar material." The tire industry, so dependent on lamp black as a rubber catalyst, was about to close up, and with it factories, which needed rubberized belting to keep them operative or tires to put on cars, tractors and trucks.

Coal production dipped for lack of timber props for new tunnels. The vital housing program, which produced some 200,000 units a year, was to be reduced to 50,000 for want of lumber, and the railways desperately needed ties for repairs.

Worst of all, the British faced new reductions in an already reduced diet. Britain must import half of all the food it consumes even in the best of times. Deprived of the rice of Malaya and the sugar of the East Indies, unable to import meat from any of the usual European sources, hunger stared at Britons from every cupboard.

The basic conditions for political unrest were the same in Britain as in France, Italy and elsewhere. They differed only in degree. Britons would not have turned to communism only because they are too fond of freedom. But who can say how much freedom they might have relinquished in exchange for promises of full stomachs?

Out of the chaos which would have been generated by a continuance of the conditions prevalent only some 20 months ago, a far more Socialist Britain than is now the case would, in the opinion of competent observers, have most certainly emerged. Marshall aid prevented that, as it avoided for Frenchmen and Italians the necessity of choosing communism as a way to economic well-being.

Mills Are Short-Handed

SPECIFICALLY, this is what Marshall aid has meant to Britain:

Where unemployment and all that it means threatened Lancashire in the winter of 1947, today the mills are begging workers to come in. Some 278,000 are working, 50,000 more are needed. The spindles and looms consumed, in 1948, 300,000 bales of cotton from our Southern States and converted it into goods which earned dollars and sterling.

Shipments of copper from the Western Hemisphere enabled the manufacturers of generators, cable, motors and electrical equipment of all kinds to achieve the dual goal of stepping up production of goods for export and of expanding the country's industrial plant. Marshall aid financed the purchase of 300 tons of copper a day, a total of 49 million dollars' worth in 1948.

A mere 5000 tons of lamp black, ordinary soot of a kind produced only by the United States, saved the tire industry in the first weeks of 1949. Eight hundred firms faced disaster until the stuff arrived.

About 2000 miles of railway were laid or relaid with ties bought with ERP dollars in 1948. But nearly half of the imported lumber, most of it American, went into construction of factories, power plants and housing and for urgent repairs to schools and hospitals. A fraction went into packing cases for the goods which Britain delivers overseas to earn the dollars of economic independence. The rest went into pit props in the mines.

A Generation Rescued

BUT, perhaps, in the long run, the most important contribution to British recovery made by ERP was that to British stomachs. In the first year of ERP, nearly half of the British allotment was spent for food. Eighty-five per cent of it came from Canada, the rest from the United States. Without the food which Britain was able to buy with ERP money, its people today would have not merely a monotonous diet but one approaching near-starvation level.

Marshall aid has helped to provide the milk, sugar, glucose and orange juice which have given Britain a lowered infant mortality rate and the healthiest children in all Europe. If it had done nothing else, the Marshall Plan would still have been a success, for upon the healthy youngsters of today the nation's and the continent's destiny depends.

Not all ERP aid is a free gift. As far as Britain is concerned, only 75 per cent of the total represents a grant. The rest is in the form of a loan, to be repaid starting in 1952 at 2½ per cent interest, with repayment on principal to begin in 1956.

If a cut is made in the overall figure for Europe, as is envisioned as a result of price drops in the United States, Britain may be confronted with serious problems. Its estimated needs for 1949-1950 already took into account lower American prices.

Some further cuts in food imports may have to be made. A bit may be shaved off here and there on raw materials. But those who decide such things in Washington will need to consider (1) whether we can afford to allow the British to reduce their already skimpy rations, and (2) whether we can afford to allow British production to go down and so risk all of the gains already made.

Report From Russia Belies 'Reform'

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

AN AMBITIOUS, highly-publicized conference of Soviet economists has revealed indirectly that the Russian people are stuck with their present restrictive dictatorship for some time to come—despite all the propaganda to the contrary.

Although principal business of the conference was to "discuss the shortcomings and tasks of research work in the field of economics," top Soviet thinkers indicated in their discussions that the Kremlin's long-promised transition from rigid, party-bound State socialism to "socialist democracy" or communism is still just a theory.

To Western capitalist nations, this shift is so much tweedledum and tweedledee as far as the ideological difference is concerned. But to the Russian people, this means no change of emphasis from heavy industry production to consumer goods, from military mindedness to peacetime thinking—from Politburo dictatorship to freer political expression as promised in the constitution of 1936.

Open confusion about the advisability of even discussing political or economic transition is revealed time and time again in the October debates, which have just been translated and released here by the Joint Committee on Slavic Studies in three successive issues of its weekly publication, Current Digest of the Soviet Press.

Blames Capitalists

THE essence of the confusion is provided by declarations, on one hand, that the transition from socialism to communism is "the order of the day," while such contrary views are expressed as that of K. V. Ostrovityanov, director of the Economics Institute of the USSR Academy of Science, who says:

". . . Soviet economists should remember that as long as the capitalist encirclement exists, we must keep our powder dry. This calls for further study and investigation of the particular laws of war economy on the basis of generalization of the practice of the Great Patriotic War . . ."

The extent of the confusion is also revealed in the barbed comments of an equally important economist, A. A. Paltsev of the Moscow Institute of Soviet Cooperative Trade. Paltsev, in listing various necessary lines of immediate study, adds in warning:

"I am told it is impossible to study communism since it does not exist. Yet those who say this take a chance of missing the bus in handling this theme . . ."

The debates are regarded here as particularly noteworthy evidence that the Kremlin's high priests of expediency and revolution expect to hold power indefinitely, while Lenin's promised transition to "socialist democracy" is kicked around in double talk.

At the same time, it is pointed out, Soviet leaders fully realize that Lenin's talk of glory and abundance is still in the minds of the people—so much so that concessions for diversion purposes must be made from time to time. The men of Kremlin also are obviously aware of the reported restiveness of the Russian citizens, politically weary, chafing at party restrictions, filled with war anxiety.

A Familiar Device

WITH this in mind, informed sources call attention to last week's widely publicized plea by the Communist Party's Central Committee for friendship of the peoples of Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union as "the best guarantee of a stable peace."

Although this plea somewhat renews eternal hope among peace-loving nations, attention is called to the fact that this is an old Soviet device. The peace plea echoes a number of similar exhortations released in publications for distribution in foreign countries. As recently as last January, for example, a Russian government bulletin reminded anti-Soviet powers that:

"Stalin, like Lenin, has always held and still believes that the contrast between the socialist and capitalist systems does not exclude their coexistence and the maintenance of peace relations between the Soviet Union and capitalist states."

While government officials here readily agree that such assertions are good reasoning, their admitted caution stems from such continuin, contradictory domestic propaganda as that recently published by the magazine Voprosy filosofii (Problems of Philosophy). The magazine said in part:

"The fundamental content of our epoch consists of the struggle between two camps—the imperialist one, headed by the United States of America, and the antiimperialist, headed by the Soviet Union . . . This is a class struggle on a world scale . . ."

Time to Ferment

CONVERSATIONS with students of Russian affairs as well as government officials also reveal that Stalin's candid pronouncement of 1927 is still regarded as valid from all present indications. Stalin, at that time, said in part:

"We cannot forget the saying of Lenin to the effect that a great deal in the matter of our construction depends on whether we succeed in delaying war with the capitalist countries, which is inevitable but which may be delayed either until proletarian revolution ripens in Europe, or until the colonial revolutions come fully to a head, or, finally, until the capitalists fight among themselves over division of the colonies.

"Therefore the maintenance of peaceful relations with capitalist countries is an obligatory task for us. The basis of our relations with capitalist countries consists in admitting the co-existence of two opposed systems."

Government officials, particularly, stress the necessity of keeping these assertions of Stalin in mind for any appraisal of last week's peace overtures, including Russia's sudden aspiration to reconcile and end the Berlin blockade.

Complicated Watch Sold to American

NEW YORK (AP).—An American (unidentified) has bought what is probably the second most complicated watch in the world for between $25,000 and $30,000. This is reported by the men who made it in Geneva, Switzerland.

The watch has two faces. One shows, besides time in seconds, minutes and hours, the time of sunset and sunrise and has a sky map showing visible constellations. The other has a repeater to give the time to the minute, an alarm clock, a calendar and it shows leap years and moon phases.

The Geneva craftsmen say the most complicated watch in the world was made by Charles Piguet of Switzerland's Joux Valley. It was stolen from a Paris shop window during the Nazi occupation of Paris in 1942. It has not been found since.

Montreal's Resilient Mayor Has Eye on National Politics

By Robert Bunnelle
Associated Press Staff Writer

MONTREAL, April 30.—Montreal is Canada's biggest and gayest city. Its Mayor Camellien Houde is—well, its mayor.

A product of the city's poorest French Canadian slums, he is stout and homely. But he is charming. He is witty and indiscreet. But he is also profound and sagacious. He is raucous and tough. But he is very sentimental.

Houde has survived far more political and economic trouble than is normal for one man. He has weathered wartime internment and abrupt loss of power. Every time he bounces back, stronger than ever.

Now he is riding high with new authority and cautious hopes about the future. He may even run for Parliament soon to extend his influence to national affairs.

"I am like a woman," says Houde. "Men cannot get along with me, yet they cannot get along without me!"

Five feet seven inches tall, Houde weighs around 270 pounds. His head is egg-shaped, big and covered sparsely with black hair. His nose is immense, his eyes pop, his mouth is broad and his chin is jutting.

But his features are mobile, his smile a shining rainbow. He is probably this continent's greatest political showman since New York's late Fiorello LaGuardia.

Street Without Name

HOUDE pronounces his name as if it were spelled "Ood," or Hood without the "H."

Son of a millworker, Houde was born in 1889 on a Montreal street so poor it didn't even have a name. When his father died he went to work at 11, in a butcher shop. He put himself through school and at 26 was made branch manager for a Montreal bank.

He still wasn't satisfied. He joined a local stage society and spent his free time studying elocution, diction and dramatics.

Houde's first wife died after bearing him two daughters, and he married again. He tried businesses ranging from selling insurance to importing wine. But he was not successful, and he started to dabble in ward politics as a Conservative.

He did well, backed by his father-in-law, a respected party member. One day he found himself in the Quebec provincial Legislative Assembly.

At first, Houde had little to say, but he was learning. Near the end of the 1927 session, he rose to speak about labor problems. Quebec's then Prime Minister Louis Alexander Tachereau, member of one of the province's most aristocratic old families, commented bitingly about Houde's apparent lack of culture.

Houde's reply is a Quebec classic: "I may not have everything which was given to the honorable Prime Minister. But we did not start from the same place nor did we follow the same course. If the honorable Prime Minister had started where I started he would assuredly not be where he is today, nor would he even be where I am today. I am the beginning, he the end of the race."

Internment Surprised Him

BUT HOUDE had made enemies in his own party and he lost his legislative seat that very year. Nothing daunted, he speedily charmed a Montreal newspaper publisher into supporting him for mayor. At 38 he became mayor of Canada's largest city. That was in 1928. For the next 10 years he fought many bitter battles of municipal and provincial politics. Sometimes he won. Sometimes he lost. When he lost it usually was his temper that defeated him.

Serving his fourth term as mayor in 1940, he suddenly was stripped of all power by the Quebec Municipal Commission. Government was placed in the hands of a six-man executive committee from which the mayor was excluded. He was reduced to handshaking, greeting. His enemies said he was too bitter, had tried to grab too much authority.

That year, too, Mayor Houde refused to comply with Canada's National Registration Act. He said it was a prelude to conscription—unpopular in Quebec. He urged fellow Montrealers to follow his example. He was promptly interned by the Canadian government. It surprised him.

Released in 1944, he was unabashed. Within three months of his return from what he called his "pilgrimage," he was reelected mayor of Montreal—still without much power.

Then, in early 1948, Houde, sworn political foe of Quebec's present autocratic Premier Maurice Duplessis, shook his old enemy's hand. Duplessis' rightist, nationalistic Union Nationale Party swept the provincial elections last July. In mid-March this year Duplessis returned the favor. His party forced through a bill which makes the mayor of Montreal ex-officio member of the executive committee and gives him the right of superintendence and control over all city departments.

"Enough power to hang myself," says Houde.

Identifying the Rats

HOUDE'S constituents love him. Montrealers call him a real character, "unoriginal." He can sway even an unfriendly crowd. "It is simple," he says in his French-accented English.

"When a crowd is against me, I point such a finger that everyone thinks I am pointing at him. I say, tonight at dinner you said to your good wife, 'Cherie, you will excuse me, but I must go tonight to hear that Camellien. This time he has gone too far——!'

"Now then, we French Canadians must always tell our wives where we go. Similarly when we come home we must have proof of where we have been. Thus the husbands who come to hear me speak must take home the speech to their wives in their memories."

MAYOR CAMELLIEN HOUDE
. . . "I am the beginning"

Not long ago, Houde was explaining Montreal's cosmopolitan population to a group of English-speaking visitors. Detailing its makeup, he said he tried personally to know as many of its people as possible. And, he added, besides many peoples, Montreal has many animals, horses, dogs and a big population of rats.

"Do you know the names of the rats, too?" somebody asked.

"Non! Monsieur, but they know mine," Houde shot back. "Every one."

Houde's record as mayor is somewhat dimmed by depression troubles. Yet he caused big markets to be built, playgrounds, parks, community halls, tunnels under railway tracks, police and fire stations. His name will live in the "Vespasiennes," underground comfort stations he built in many of Montreal's squares. Familiarly they are known here as "Camelliens."

Lately, Houde has sought federal money to help build subways in Montreal which also could serve as air raid shelters.

Office Funnels Billions in Claims

FRIEDBERG, GERMANY, April 30 (U.P.).—The contents of two old gray houses nestled in this quiet Hessian village provide the sole hope of hundreds of thousands of persons, many of them Americans, of getting back what was taken from them by the Nazis.

A sign in front of the ramshackle stucco structures identifies them as the headquarters of the Central Filing Agency, only clearing house for billions of dollars worth of claims from people now spread all over the world.

Formal claims to recover homes, land, art treasures, furniture and even factories and whole commercial concerns confiscated by Hitler's legions must come through this office.

The Central Filing Agency is headed by an American, Bernard Fischbein of El Paso, Tex., who served in the Army Intelligence during World War II. He is aided by a staff of 25 Germans.

The deadline for filing claims was December 31, 1948. The last days brought such a flood of claims that Fischbein and his assistants haven't worked their way to the bottom of the pile yet.

As near as he can figure out, Fischbein's files now contain more than 206,000 claims involving some four billion dollars worth of property.

The claims processed so far range from 300 marks (about $100) for a kitchen table wrecked by Storm Troopers to bides for millions involved in such gigantic projects as the Rosenthal ceramic works, the Schade and Fuellgrabe grocery chain of 180 stores and the Rothschild banking interests.

Burning Mine Promises New Power Source

By John W. Ball

Post Reporter

JASPER, ALA., April 30.—Uncle Sam and the Alabama Power Co., one of the South's biggest public utilities, are partners in a mammoth experiment here with a paradoxical purpose—to make natural gas artificially.

They have set fire to a rich coal mine 150 to 200 feet beneath the top of Gorgas Mountain. By controlling the fire through a series of five bores, they are converting the coal into gas. The gas is expected to contain from 15 to 25 per cent carbon monoxide, some carbon dioxide and hydrogen, with a heating volume of 100 to 124 British thermal units.

The APC's 20-million-dollar power plant stands at the foot of Gorgas Mountain. An additional 20-million-dollar unit is being erected adjoining it. If the plan succeeds, the gas will fire boilers to generate electricity, and the power will be carried over copper transmission lines to where it is needed.

The mine was fired only last month, March 18. Sufficient heat has not yet been generated in the underground workings to produce gas in any great quantity. Present temperature in the entry is believed to be from 1000 to 2000 degrees Fahrenheit. Efficient production is not expected until this can be built up to 2000 to 2500.

'Thin' Seams Everywhere

THE potentialities of the project appear almost unlimited. The men in charge have an air of optimism. James L. Elder is in charge for the Interior Department Bureau of Mines, Hugh G. Graham is his assistant and R. C. Montgomery is top man for the company.

They admit there is much that they don't know about what is ahead. They experimented on a small scale nearby in 1947, and got rid of a lot of bugs. That experiment was only 30 feet beneath the surface and the gas leaked out through cracks in the soil.

If their dream comes true, it will present the country with a new source of power vastly more widespread than our hydroelectric possibilities. Every State except Florida has coal deposits too small, too nearly worked out or with seams too thin or dirty to be mined profitably. This method can make use of all—even, perhaps, of the valuable mines in Pennsylvania and elsewhere that have been burning out of control for years.

The so-called "wagon mines" of Maryland, the small and worked-out mines scattered all over Virginia, would be potential power plants. The arduous job of digging fuel deep in the bowels of the earth would be eliminated. Coal would be turned into power without being moved from the spot where Nature put it.

The diggings have already started producing. An escape pipe—a half-inch pipe sticking out of the ground—was opened for The Washington Post reporter, and out shot the gas. Montgomery touched a match to it, and almost colorless flames roared into the air.

These small pipes reach down to thermometers buried at varying distances from the mine entry, as the mine proper is called. One, 10 feet from the entry, was forcing out a thin stream of highly inflammable coal tar oil, all the way up the 168 feet at that point. Half a bucket of this oil had flowed from the pipe during the morning.

Soviet Has Been Busy

THE idea is not new, but the venture is, in this country. Gasification of slack and waste coal in mines was suggested by Sir William Simons in 1868. In 1888, Prof. D. I. Mendeleev, a Russian, suggested that coal could be gasified in place. An American, A. G. Betts, obtained a British patent in 1909 covering a method of gasifying coal in the mine by means of boreholes. In 1912, Sir William Ramsay, an English scientist, suggested producing gas rather than coal by means of underground retorts. He planned an experiment that was postponed by World War I, and later was given up because of his death. Lenin included underground gasification in the Russian research program in 1917, but preliminary experiments were not begun until 1930. From 1930 to 1948, many experiments were performed. The Russians claim the processes have been applied commercially at several installations.

Firing the mine. Arthur E. Sands, chemical engineer, of Morgansville, W. Va., lowers a thermite bomb onto a pile of oil-soaked kindling and newspapers at the bottom of the bore. The blaze was touched off March 18 and has not yet reached production intensity

A similar experiment is under way in Belgium, and the operators claim to be nearing production sufficient for industrial use. An underground gasification experiment was made in Valderno, Italy, in 1947 with low-grade lignite.

The area for the Alabama experiment is part of the rich coal country owned by Alabama Power in the northern part of the State. Alabama Power provided the mine, set up the power plant and provided many technicians, scientists and engineers. The Bureau of Mines provided much of the personnel machinery and equipment. About $500,000 has been invested, much of it war surplus from the War Assets Administration, Lend-Lease and the armed services.

Among the Lend-Lease items is a huge compressor of 7200 cubic feet per minute air capacity, that was built for Russia. From the Army came a large section of rubber hosing, 8 inches in diameter, made to carry gasoline across the English Channel to Eisenhower's armies.

THE experiment opens up other ideas. The bossmen on the job, as they are called in the deep South, have collateral dreams. These include (1) using much the same method to force steam into the mine and produce a water gas, similar to the artificial gas manufactured by big city gas utilities, and (2) production of a gas that can be converted on the spot to liquid fuel, or artificial gasoline.

The mine is 1600 feet in length, with a slight incline so that it may be flooded at any time to extinguish the flames. The shaft was built by miners from an outcropping of in the mountainside. Both ends were sealed with fire brick, to halt extension of the fire.

Along the course of the vein, the bore holes were sunk at about 300-foot intervals. When one bore hole is used as an intake for air, another is used as an outflow for the gas. The gas actually is just incompletely burned coal. In reversing the flow from one bore to another, steam must be used. Otherwise the gas would be blown back into the fire chamber, and the resulting explosion would resemble an earthquake.

The gas expected to result from this experiment is not, of course, nearly as potent as either a natural gas, which has a BTU volume of about 1000, or manufactured gas with 580 BTU. But it is sufficient to fire boilers for electricity, and the bossmen expect it to be perfected to a much higher power.

Natural gas is primarily methane, and manufactured or water gase is ethane with some higher hydrocarbons. Both methane and ethane, the scientists believe, can be made underground in coal seams by different processes.

'Dry' Mississippi Taxes Its Bootleggers

By Clement Brossier

Associated Press Staff Writer

JACKSON, MISS., April 30.—Mississippi, one of the Nation's two dry States, collected taxes on a 10-million-dollar illegal liquor industry last year.

It's done through the State's 10 per cent "black market" tax. Technically imposed on the sale of all illegal commodities, it is enforced only against the whisky business. Some cities have it, too.

When it comes to whisky, there are actually two Mississippis—one wet, the other dry.

"Wet" Mississippi runs along the Mississippi River, the Gulf Coast and through the rich delta area of the north. It is primarily urban.

"Dry" Mississippi is in the interior, where the population is predominantly rural and the ministers and churches are more powerful.

Mississippi's Legislature is rural-dominated, that is, by the dry areas. That majority has been a mainstay of the prohibition forces.

During debate by the 1948 Legislature on a bill to repeal the black market tax, one representative summed up the situation like this:

"The way things are now, everybody is fairly happy. The church people have prohibition. The people have their whisky. The State collects taxes. And the bootleggers have a market."

Perennial Repeal Debate

BUT IT ISN'T quite that simple. The State has had prohibition since 1908, long before Mr. Volstead's amendment. There hasn't been a legislative session since 1934 that hasn't argued over repeal. Beer was legalized, but the Legislature refused to lift the ban on hard liquor.

The black market tax law was fathered by the late Gov. Thomas L. Bailey in 1944. He figured the whisky was being sold and the State ought to get its cut.

The tax is now being collected by his widow, elected State tax collector in 1947. She promises an even bigger return for 1949 than the $955,000 paid in last year.

Mrs. Bailey keeps tabs on her customers mainly through the wholesalers. It proved too much of a job, she says, to go out into the woods and track down every retailer. So the wholesaler collects from the retailer when he picks up his load and she keeps a check on the wholesalers through the Federal alcohol tax stamp record.

The Majority Decides

DESPITE a State-wide prohibition law and a State-wide black market tax, there is no State-wide enforcement agency. That lets the individual counties exercise a sort of unofficial local option.

How it works was explained by Walthall County Sheriff M. E. Bullock. He got tired of being needled on his enforcement activities.

"I think we have in our communities exactly what the majority of the people want," he said in a prepared statement. "If they are willing to permit it they are at fault.

"Providing evidence to your law enforcement officers is far better than huddling on street corners and in Sunday school rooms giving the sheriff hell for his failure to enforce the law."

Walthall County borders on wet Louisiana.

The enforcement problem is complicated by the average Mississippians' addiction to home rule. The State's 82 sheriffs like the setup pretty much as it is. They make a lot more in fees and fines than if there were a central enforcement agency.

The 1948 Legislature batted down a whole series of bills which would have set up such an agency. One would have made the State highway patrol a semi-State police charged with enforcing, among other things, the prohibition law. Another would have set up a 100-man force to do nothing but raid the bootleggers.

Rankin County Wide Open

THE tax is officially collected in Natchez and Vicksburg on the river and in Pascagoula on the coasts, as a municipal revenue measure. Unofficially, there are a number of other towns deriving income from the trade.

In tiny Arcola (pop. 400) up in the Delta, Town Marshal John Mosley doesn't think a city black market tax is quite right. In a "you know as well as I" vein, he charged in an open letter to the mayor that the city was collecting $25 a month from every bootlegger in town.

Jackson, the State's capital and largest city, is fairly dry. But neighboring Rankin County, about 6 miles away, sports its famed "Gold Coast" where anything from corn to kummel is available.

In Meridian, the county attorney, Will Clayton, told the court that it was hard to get a liquor conviction because "the jurors don't seem to want to convict."

In Natchez, over on the river, the Christian Citizens League recently sought an injunction from Chancery Court closing down three barrooms on the town's main street. The chancellor refused. Closing down just three spots would be discrimination, he said.

He promised to act if the league brought action against every whisky operator in the county. He said he'd accept the Natchez black market tax records as evidence.

"Whew," said Walter D. Coleman, the league's attorney. "It was tough enough getting together on action against these three places. To get anything going against all 65 of the spots now operating means we'll be fighting the entire town."

Loosening of Poll Tax a Swat at Crump

Special to The Washington Post.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 30.—The Tennessee Legislature took a healthy swing at its former political master, Memphis Boss Ed Crump, before quitting earlier this month.

It loosened the State's voting requirements by exempting all women and war veterans from payment of poll taxes. It then voted a State-wide referendum November 8 on the question of a constitutional convention to remodel Tennessee's fundamental law, which has been unaltered since the collapse of the carpetbagging regimes in 1870. Among changes proposed is complete repeal of all poll taxes. Another would raise the pay of State legislators above the present $4 a day.

The $1 poll tax, payable 60 days ahead of election, helps keep political machines alive. Crump was credited with using opposition to Negro voting as a weapon in seizing control of the Memphis election machinery a generation ago.

More recently he has been charged with "block voting" of Negroes. This is the method by which a political leader pays poll taxes in advance for a block of voters who otherwise would not qualify, and then votes them in a group.

50 Pct. Vote Increase

POLITICAL experts predict that the changes already granted will increase the number of Tennessee voters by 300,000—a better than 50 per cent jump over the 550,000 who voted for President last November.

The effect of poll taxes on Tennessee elections is demonstrated by the following figures:

1. Last fall Kentucky, with a population of 2,845,627, cast 825,000 votes for President. Tennessee, with 2,915,627 population, cast only 550,000.

2. Compared with Northern States without poll tax or other restrictions, Tennessee falls still farther behind. Iowa, with 400,000 fewer inhabitants, cast 1,050,000 votes for President last November.

Tennessee, however, compares its record with that of adjoining Georgia, where voting laws are even more restrictive. Georgia, with a population of 3,123,000, cast only 425 votes for President—one of the slackest records in the Nation.

Removal of poll taxes will complicate Tennessee's election machinery. The poll tax, reduced at the recent session to 50 cents for each male citizen not a war veteran, provides the only record of who is eligible to vote in many counties. There is no State-wide registration system. Voters must register only in counties of more than 40,000 population or in towns of more than 2500 inhabitants. More than half the 95 counties fail to meet either requirement, and without the poll tax list there will be no control of voters in those communities.

There is a question about the constitutionality of the removal of poll tax requirements from veterans, but cynics say nobody has the political courage to challenge it. Tennessee veterans take their politics seriously, in one case, at Athens, using force.

The Legislature in 1943 passed a law abolishing the poll tax. This was found unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court. The constitution requires the tax from "all male citizens over 21" and fixes the rate at "not less than 50 cents nor more than $1."

The decision setting aside the 1943 laws was a masterpiece of confusion. It held, in effect, that when the Legislature once levied a poll tax under the constitutional provision, it surrendered the right of future Legislatures to repeal the levy. But it didn't remove their right to change the amount. In other words, it gave the State Assembly power to create a new tax or to amend the old one, but not the power to destroy it.

Tradition of Chivalry

IN REMOVING the poll tax from women, the State lawmakers referred over and over again to the Tennessee Legislature's traditional political chivalry. They dragged out history to show that the Assembly was called into special session in 1920 by Governor Albert H. Roberts to become the thirty-sixth and deciding State to ratify the Nineteenth Amendment, which gave women national suffrage.

But they failed to point out that Roberts acted only after much prodding by President Wilson, who saw a benefit to his party's Cox and Roosevelt ticket that fall.

They also neglected to point out that the women that November trooped to the polls for a Republican, Warren G. Harding, placing Tennessee in the Republican column for the first time in decades.

Reece 'Road Show' Satirizes Dewey

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 30.—Carroll Reece, erstwhile Congressman, Republican National Chairman and candidate for Senator from Tennessee, has a new act. Equipped with a gee-tar and high tenor voice, he is putting on an imitation of Roy Acuff, the hillbilly singer who ran for Governor on the ticket with him last fall.

There are reportedly two shows, one for the ladies. The other is a medley of fire and brimstone, scarcasm, satire and ridicule, the last largely directed against a New York Governor who shares Reece's political faith but not his affection.

His spotlight act has to do with a "junior Uncle Tom," bursting with unity and political standards so high they are out of sight, and "Little Eva Republican Party" who slips while climbing to glory on the golden stairs. It is wowing the hinterland.

Expert Discounts Pushbutton War

By Frank Carey

Associated Press Science Reporter

"IT'S fairly clear that pushbutton warfare is a hell of a long way off."

So says Dr. Lloyd V. Berkner, chosen to work up the European arms aid program proposed in connection with the North Atlantic Security Pact.

And he says, "I seriously question whether we'll ever have a true pushbotton war."

Berkner, 44-year-old Carnegie Institution scientist, says he believes the reason he got the nod from the State Department over a military man is twofold:

1. He has had extensive experience in the evaluation of all kinds of weapons—from battleships to bazookas.

2. As a scientist, he is trained in the "scientific method" of appraising "critically and objectively" a given set of observations.

He says it's important to apply that method in selecting weapons—bearing in mind both the objective to be achieved and the ability of the Nation's economy to stand the cost.

Here's an example of what he has in mind:

"There's a strong tendency to jump to conclusions that guided missiles will revolutionize warfare—and yet a guided missile is a more complicated instrument than an airplane. It's got to have the intelligence of an airplane with the crew in it.

"We've got to ask ourselves this: Can we afford to heave a gadget that is considerably more complicated than an airplane at an enemy on a one-shot basis?"

Polar Experience

BERKNER, a graying 6-footer, is world renowned as an electronics expert. He was one of the pioneers of radar, as well as a co-developer of the "VT" proximity fuse. He invented an instrument to help in the forecasting of ionospheric disturbances which can bedevil radio communications. And as a radioman with Admiral Richard E. Byrd's first Antarctic expedition, he gained first-hand knowledge of communications in Polar regions.

But Berkner also has had experience with nonelectronic equipment of war.

He was under fire aboard an aircraft carrier during the war. He's an experienced airplane pilot. And he served as a consultant to the armor and ordnance division of the National Defense Research Committee just before the war.

He even could pick good war horses if need be. During his boyhood in North Dakota, his father used to bring in tough broncos from Montana.

DR. LLOYD BERKNER

. . . "Can we afford it?"

During the war, Berkner became a captain in the Naval Reserve. As assistant head of the radio and electrical branch of the Navy's Bureau of Aeronautics, he was credited by friends as being one of the men largely responsible for the introduction of airborne radar into the Navy.

"I was part of the team," says Berkner himself.

Soon after the war, he was made executive secretary of the Government's Joint Research and Development Board, which supervised work on various advanced developments in armament. Later—and this provided much of the background for his new post—he headed a special committee to study the relative importance of various weapons systems to American security.

An Operator at 13

BERKNER is of German-French stock. He was born near Perth, N. Dak., 25 miles from the Canadian border. When he was 7 his father—a farmer—moved the family to Sleepy Eye, Minn.

He became a "ham" radio operator at 13, building his own equipment. Right after finishing high school at 17, he got a job teaching radio code in New York. Then he got a commercial operator's license and went to sea as a radioman.

Berkner entered the University of Minnesota in 1923 to study electrical engineering. He was in charge of the university's first broadcasting station. After getting his degree, he joined the airways division of the Government's Bureau of Lighthouses, which later became the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

In May, 1928, he was lent to assist Amelia Earhart on the radio equipment for her first transatlantic flight. That June he joined the National Bureau of Standards—and got married.

The newlyweds weren't together long when Berkner was lent to the Byrd Antarctic expedition. Berkner helped set up the radio station at Little America, and he and another operator sent between 10,000 and 12,000 words a day in Morse code to one newspaper (New York Times) alone.

"They became so steeped in code," says a friend, "that they actually though in code and frequently dreamed in code."

Disease Dividend

BERKNER joined the Carnegie Institution in 1933 as a physicist studying the magnetism of the earth. At night he developed his instrument to analyze the ionosphere—the great electrical sheet around the earth which refracts radio waves.

He really went to town on it when his little daughter Patricia got whooping cough. Berkner picked it up and was isolated. Working all alone, he finished the instrument, which was of great wartime assistance to the Allies.

Now on leave from Carnegie, Berkner feels "very bad" about leaving his research work but—

"I consider that our foreign policy since the war has been essentially sound. We have pushed the ball to the 10-yard line—and it's first down, goal to go . . .

"I feel strongly that warfare happens when people are convinced in advance that they can accomplish a certain objective. We want to make clear to them that it is not to their interests to do so, and on such a basis I don't believe there will be any war.

"But, if we sit back and look like easy marks, so that they'll say, 'Hell, a nice little easy war will accomplish what we want,' then it's possible that there might be a war."

Berkner has a house and an acre of land in Bethesda. He spends any spare time he has on gardening, landscaping and maintaining some bridges he's built over a creek coursing through his land.

He plays golf, but Patricia, now 17, can take him. He and his wife have another daughter, Phyllis, who is 8.

Politicians Heeding Greeley

By Jack Bell

Associated Press Staff Writer

WESTWARD the course of politics takes its way!

With their minds on the 1950 congressional elections, Democrats are vying with Republicans to prove that each loves the wide open spaces—and the people who vote in them—more than the other.

The political stake in the West is regarded so seriously here that Democratic Chairman J. Howard McGrath recently made the long trek to Albuquerque, N. Mex., to address a Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner. McGrath, a Rhode Islander, boned up ahead of time and delivered quite a speech on reclamation.

Typical McGrath quote:

"Water and power hold the key to the future of the West. To develop the well-rounded economy which is its destiny, the West must throw off the shackles of Wall Street monopoly which seeks to keep the West as a colonial empire to exploit."

McGrath acknowledged that the GOP Eightieth Congress made a record-breaking appropriation for reclamation. But he charged that the Republicans hedged the appropriation with "crippling limitations which sought to force Reclamation to turn over public power from its dams for sale and exploitation, with a big windfall of profits by private power companies."

The GOP bid for favor in the West is typified by its campaign to offset the 1948 Democratic charges that the Eightieth Congress denied farmers grain storage facilities. It fell to an Easterner, Senator Williams (R., Del.), to take the lead in this effort.

Williams charged in the Senate that actually the Agriculture Department had sold, at a fraction of cost, Government-owned grain bins that could have stored 250 million bushels and had failed to use its authority to acquire others.

His Master's Voice

In a symposium held in New York under the auspices of the Institute of Trade and Commerce Professions, Professor Viner asserted that a Government official when speaking to the public "has to speak with his master's voice." In reply, Vice Chairman Keyserling of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, denied that he had ever voiced any opinions except his own. Judging from reports, it was a rather heated interchange on a subject that almost invariably provokes controversy. Both disputants, however, evaded the real issue, it seems to us: namely, whether Government officials have the right to voice in public personal opinions that conflict with the views of their official superiors.

We believe that they do not have that right, but are under an obligation to maintain silence if they disagree with Administration policies. While those policies are in the formative stage, responsible officials should make their views known to their associates and superiors, and do their utmost to influence the decisions finally made. Of course, no Government statistician or economic analyst should under any circumstances permit his findings of fact or his objective analyses based on facts to be distorted for reasons of political expediency. But Government officials, whether top-ranking executives or economic consultants, such as members of the Advisory Council, should always present a united front to the world at large. Open expressions of dissent may satisfy the ego of some individual protestants, but the effect is to instil into the minds of the people distrust of the policies being followed and possibly spell defeat of Administration-indorsed programs.

In short, there are sound reasons why Government officials should be an echo of the master's voice, when they speak in public. If they can conform without doing violence to their convictions, that is a fortunate circumstance. In any case, they should make certain in advance of publication that their personal views are acceptable to the political heads of the Government they serve. On the other hand, if they find themselves entirely out of sympathy with the main objectives of the agency or department to which they are attached, they can regain their freedom to express their minds by handing in their resignations.

There is nothing peculiarly repressive about the restrictions on freedom of public speech imposed on Government officials. Like the executives of any private enterprise they must present an appearance of unity before the public after settling their differences in seclusion, if work is to go forward efficiently along planned lines. This kind of subordination is a characteristic of good teamwork and those who play the game loyally are entitled to praise instead of blame.

Negro Education

Remembering the long and vigorous efforts of the Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes on behalf of improved race relations here, we read with pleasure his 35-year report on the work of the Phelps-Stokes Fund. It is entitled: Progress in Negro Status and Race Relations, 1911-1946. The Phelps-Stokes Fund is of modest size; the annual income it can distribute comes to only about $50,000 a year, though it has received and administered many special grants from other sources over the 35 years covered in this report.

The fund was created largely to advance Negro education and it has concentrated its efforts in this field, both in the United States and Africa. Obviously, no great accomplishments could be expected from the direct application of the relatively small sums the fund could spend. Its method, therefore, has been rather to act as stimulant and catalyst and moral supporter of the cause of Negro education. It pioneered, for instance, in discovering exactly what the situation was in Negro education and where the need for progress could best be met through the most effective application of energy and effort.

Dr. Stokes notes with satisfaction that progress has been considerable during the years since 1911. Negro literacy increased from 69.5 per cent in 1910 to 91 per cent in 1945. Negro pupils in public schools increased from 1.6 million to 2.7 million in the same period, Negro college students from 1500 to 53,000, the number of Negro high schools from 91 to 1200. Dr. Stokes modestly avoids any attempt to measure the credit due to the Phelps-Stokes Fund for these improvements, but one can safely say that its share is substantial.

Dr. Stokes does not overlook the fact that Negro education is only one side of the coin in the improvement of interracial relations and in the status of the Negro in the United States. The other side—and perhaps the more important one basically—is education among whites about the Negro. Here, he points out, there has been equal progress. The clear findings of science that there are no racially superior or inferior groups has gained wide acceptance, bolstered by the undoubted accomplishments of many Negroes who have had education and opportunity to show their worth. The "white problem" is thus moving toward solution along with the "Negro problem."

Question Of Salvation

No recent incident of the news has provoked more comment or inquiry from our readers than the case of the three teachers who were dismissed from the faculty of Boston College after they had accused the Jesuit directors of that institution of permitting the teaching of heresy. The heresy alleged to have been tolerated, and indeed implicitly approved, is the doctrine that salvation is possible outside the Catholic Church. Apparently because he encouraged the dismissed teachers in their position, a Jesuit priest, the Rev. Leonard Feeney, has been deprived of his faculties by the ordinary of the Boston diocese, and this disciplinary action, according to a dispatch from Rome dated April 21, has been upheld at the Vatican.

It is not of course for us to take sides in what appears to be a purely theological controversy. Still, in the interest of the many readers of various faiths who have expressed great bewilderment concerning the nature of the controversy, we venture to suggest that it turns primarily upon the question of what is meant by the church. The dictum Extra Ecclesiam nulla salus is at least as old as the third century. It occurs in the epistles of St. Cyprian, and is made even more explicit by St. Augustine who employs the words, Extra Ecclesiam Catholicam. The point on which Catholics and Protestants appear to agree is that the church in its broader sense consists of all persons who have been duly baptized.

According to some theologians, baptism may be of three forms; that is, of water, or of blood, meaning martyrdom, or of desire. The last form has been interpreted to apply to persons who, having no opportunity to hear the Christian revelation, nevertheless desire union with God. It appears to be Catholic teaching that if such persons obey the natural moral law (which is held to be universally perceptible by the unaided, light of human reason) they may be saved. This, however, leaves open the question of persons to whom the Christian revelation has been communicated but who have nevertheless rejected it. It leaves open also the question of Protestants, schismatics and others who, while accepting the principle that salvation is possible only in the church, reject the claim of the Catholic Church that it is the only true church.

Persons in these categories are held to be "ignorant" in a spiritual sense of the word. Such ignorance is considered either "vincible" or "invincible." Where it is invincible—that is, where the person is constitutionally and conscientiously unable to recognize what is held to be the validity of Catholic teaching—salvation is nevertheless possible. Where the ignorance is vincible, however—that is, where the person is convinced of the validity of the claims, but nevertheless rejects them—that is another matter, and would amount to a deliberate refusal of grace.

Another position, however, appears to be possible, that of Origen, sometimes called universalism. The rational mind of Origen held it incredible that a just and merciful God would create souls with foreknowledge of their damnation, or that the sufferings of the wicked after death should exclude the possibility of ultimate purification and redemption. Apparently there is still disagreement among Catholic theologians about whether or not Origenism is an heretical doctrine; but it is perhaps significant that the church has never at any time designated any particular person, living or historical, as having been definitely lost.

One For Humanity

In an age in which the general tendency has been toward the aggrandizement of the state over the rights of the human person, it is a pleasure to record a victory for the principle of human rights over the pretensions of the omnipotent state. Last Monday the General Assembly of the United Nations by a vote of 39 to 6 condemned the Soviet Russian practice of refusing Russian-born wives of diplomats and other foreigners permission to accompany their husbands out of the country. The Assembly by a resolution has declared this practice a violation of the Charter and an obstacle to friendly relations among nations. The only delegations voting against the resolution were the Russians and their satellites and the Yugoslavs.

The credit for this important declaration belongs primarily to Don Luiz de Cruz-Ocampo, formerly Chilean Ambassador to Moscow, whose son, Alvaro, and daughter-in-law, Dona Lessena de Cruz, are still in Russia. When Don Luiz was recalled, Dona Lessena was notified that she could not leave Russia with the Ambassador's family; whereupon her husband elected to remain with her. The case aroused great indignation in Chile, whose government promptly broke off diplomatic relations with the Soviets and interned the Soviet diplomatic delegation in Chile as hostages. It was the Chilean representative, Dr. Hernan Santa Cruz, who introduced the resolution adopted by the Assembly.

Last December, when Don Luiz told his story to the Assembly at Paris, the Soviet delegate, M. Pavlov, replying to the charges, insulted the intelligences of his auditors by asserting that the reason for refusing export visas to the delicately nurtured Russian wives of foreigners was that such women were unable to endure the horrors of life in capitalist countries, where, in addition to other indignities, they might be obliged to wash dishes or even to do without perfume and jewelry.

But such effronteries are apparently an old Russian custom. A precedent from the early sixteenth century is described in a biography of Ivan Grozny (Ivan the Terrible) by one R. Wipper of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, an English translation of which was published about two years ago by the Foreign Languages Publishing House at Moscow. M. Wipper recalls the case of an Ambassador from Denmark with which the court of Ivan III (grandfather of the Terrible One) was then allied. The Ambassador, it seems, had married a Russian woman; but at the conclusion of his embassy he was notified that he must leave his wife behind. When the Danish monarch requested an explanation of this strange edict, Ivan had his Minister of Foreign Affairs reply haughtily that

> It is not the custom in our domains for us to give free men in bondage; and this applies not only to the people of our domains but also to those of others who reside in our domains; that woman is of our domain and it would be unseemly for us to give that woman in bondage to your man.

Commonwealth

The new commonwealth which has arisen in London in place of the British Commonwealth is unique in the history of political institutions. The descriptive word "British" has been dropped, and India, which had insisted on becoming an independent sovereign republic, stays in the association. The problem was to find some other link in place of the one provided by the Statute of Westminster extending the British monarchy over all the dominions. An ingenious solution has been contrived. Instead of India acknowledging King George as its King, it will acknowledge the King as head of the commonwealth. This is the only outward sign and symbol of India's membership of the commonwealth.

But the reports from London indicate that the link, paradoxically enough, has become stronger for its loosening. It has enabled Pakistan and Ceylon to stay in association with India under the aegis of the commonwealth. That will promote neighborliness. And these three members are likewise banded together with South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand. This is of no less importance. Asia is now in a ferment, tossing in revolt against the established order, domestic as well as foreign. To deal with the ferment will require patience and wisdom and firmness exercized in common. In this respect the new commonwealth represents a contribution to statesmanship in Asia. Without a doubt the convulsion in China was a propelling force bringing the former dominions into a new association.

It is more and more recognized that Premier Nehru has become a key figure in the future of Asia. A short while ago he was quoted as thinking of India as a neutral between East and West—meaning Soviet Russia and the free world. His acts, however, are more eloquent than his words, and his association in the new commonwealth is the association of an actionist, not a neutral. There can be no complacence in India over the spectacle presented both east and west of India. On the one side India sees the Soviet rumblings in Iran, the country which stands in the way of Soviet designs on the Persian Gulf. On the other side the intensification of chaos in China will have and is having repercussions in the Indian Ocean. Nehru could not stay neutral even if he would. He is cast in a historic role, and his decision in London—for India, where he has a unique influence, left him to make his own decision—shows that he is prepared to play it.

The new status and the extension of the commonwealth are of great interest to the United States as a world power. Doubtless both developments will be welcomed. Judging from the entertainment lists in London, the United States has been kept in close contact with the commonwealth negotiations. The prime reason for this, of course, lies in the common concern for security against Soviet aggression.

In recent years the world policy of the United States toward events in Asia has never been formulated. But there are traditional American principles which are adaptable to the crisis in Asia. The United States always has stood for cooperative action in Asia in defense of the open door of equal and nondiscriminatory treatment. It has never believed in standing in the way of nations who want to become independent. It has resisted aggression. Applied to the new situation in Asia, these principles should be the nexus between the commonwealth and the United States in helping to guide the future of Asia.

Military News

As a mother of two GI sons, one of whom served 27 months in the Pacific during World War II, and the other one now in the Army stationed in Germany, I am shocked at the recent Pentagon edict, which was described in your issue of April 22, under the heading "Pentagon Orders Information Curb."

This edict not only violates the constitutional rights of free speech but coming at a time when the American people are vitally concerned with the military implications of the North Atlantic Treaty now before the Senate, its effect is indeed sinister. It virtually establishes a dictatorship which will be able to parcel out only such information as "the people need to know" as the military spokesman for the defense establishment implied in denying that any limitation on access to information was intended.

If our republic is to remain free, the people and not the Pentagon and the State Department, or foreigners, must decide the issues now before us. Unless our Reserve officers, National Guard officers, retired military officers, enlisted men and others are permitted to speak freely on the military implications of this Atlantic Treaty, the American people cannot possibly learn enough of the facts to make an intelligent decision. With the Pentagon putting a curb on the release of military information, unless approved by its security board, the American people are denied information to which we of right are entitled.

Dogs For Vivisection

It is apparent that the antivivisectionists, who are in particularly loud voice at this time, are completely unacquainted with the facts in dog experimentation. They do not realize that anesthesia and aseptic conditions are maintained throughout. Instead, they prefer to believe the emotional trash which is distributed copiously.

It is only common sense to realize that when a new technique is developed, there must be experimentation to prove its value before being tried on human beings. The dog, which is physiologically quite similar to man, is the natural choice when the experiment is such that the relatively expensive monkey is not required.

I would like to propose, therefore, that these "humane" people who prefer to ignore mankind, for the sake of dogkind, volunteer themselves as experimental subjects in great enough numbers so that there would be no need for canine subjects.

In reply to the April 27 letter from Dr. Albritton it seems to me we are losing sight of the true issue at stake. He states he has been burned up over certain alleged deficiencies in the office of the poundmaster.

We all make mistakes, even the medical profession. How about the doctor who operated on a patient's lung—removing part of the wrong lung—and the blood transfusion given a member of my family in 15 minutes instead of 40 which almost killed her, the dentist who removed all my father's teeth in one operation, causing the infection to spread through his body and hospitalizing him nine months? All this doesn't cause me to revile the medical profession or be "burned up."

Let us not confuse the issue—it is not whether the poundmaster knows his business—it is whether we are going to allow Washington dogs to suffer tortures to satisfy a certain number of sadistic persons who actually cannot state positively that such practices have ever helped anyone.

The End Is Not Yet

In November, 1859, several weeks before he was hanged for his Harpers Ferry adventure. the abolitionist John Brown made this statement:

"You may dispose of me very easily; I am nearly disposed of now, but this question is still to be settled—the Negro-question, I mean. The end is not yet."

Might I, for wishful-thinking countrymen, make a person of the inanimate Berlin airlift-cum-blockade situation and have that person paraphrase John Brown:

"You may dispose of me very easily; I am nearly disposed of now, but this question is still to be settled—the Soviet question, I mean. The end is not Yet."

Hughes Biography

For more than 20 years Charles Evans Hughes lived in Washington while he was serving the Nation as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, Secretary of State and Chief Justice of the United States. In gathering material for Mr. Hughes' biography, which I am writing, I have interviewed dozens of Washingtonians who knew him well or were associated with him in an official capacity.

Since it is obviously impossible for me to call upon all of those who knew him and who may have authenticated stories, or anecdotes or unpublished facts about his career, I request the privilege of soliciting such information through your columns.

Mr. Hughes was a man of wide interests and fabulous achievements. The record of his career ought to be made as complete and as accurate as it is humanly possible to make it. It is for this reason that I feel free to request your readers to make available to me through The Washington Post any stories or data they may have about Mr. Hughes.

Martinsville Trial

Your paper has covered the Martinsville, Va., rape case very thoroughly, and I can't help but wonder what would have happened if the victim had been a Negro and the seven accused were whites. Would the trial have gone by as swiftly? Would the white people be convicted as quickly, and sentenced to the chair?

"Seventy-Five Cent Minimum"

Since the end of World War II, repeated efforts have been made to secure congressional approval of amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act that would raise the Federal minimum wage above the present 40 cents. and otherwise improve the law. During this period, those of us who have worked for this legislation have been encouraged by the splendid support that The Washington Post has given to the proposed liberalization measures.

It was with surprise and no little disappointment, therefore, that many of us read your editorial of March 12, "Seventy-Five-Cent Minimum." What amazed us most, in view of the facts in the case and in light of your editorial on "Minimum Wage" of April 28, 1948, was your assertion that the Lesinski bill (HR 3190) is "defective in not providing for a succession of increases in pay" that would ultimately result in a 75-cent minimum. A gradual increase to 75 cents, you said, was necessary in order to permit industry to adjust to this proposed rate.

In your editorial of a year ago you gave no indication that you considered the immediate adoption of a 75-cent minimum economically inadvisable. In fact, you quoted Dr. Isador Lubin to show that the wages of only 10 per cent of the workers covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act would have to be raised to reach the 75 cents, and the total wage bill would be increased by an estimated addition of only 1 per cent.

May we call your attention to the fact that today, a year later, the percentage of workers affected is still less. Only 6 per cent of those presently covered by the law earn less than 75 cents; and if coverage were extended to 7 million additional workers, as proposed by the Thomas bill (S. 653) the percentage immediately affected would be 9 per cent.

In his recent testimony (April 11) before a subcommittee of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee of the Senate, William McComb, administrator of the Fair Labor Standards Act, suggested that the original 25-cent rate, the lowest of the succession of rates adopted by Congress in 1938, affected as large a proportion of the workers originally covered by the law as would the 75-cent rate today.

The administrator said "the vast majority of workers now covered who are earning less than 75 cents are earning above 60 cents an hour. The actual increase in the minimum wage is therefore not 35 cents an hour, but typically an increase of 5 to 15 cents an hour. . . . The impact in 1938 of a 25-cent minimum wage percentagewise was far greater than the impact of a 75-cent rate would be today, and these low-wage industries not only survived but prospered."

I wonder whether you realize that the industry committee method has been in operation in the States for more than 35 years. All but two of the 26 State minimum wage laws provide for establishing minimum wages on the recommendation of wage boards. We are sure it would be difficult to convince the States that their method is "not calculated to further the purpose of minimum wage legislation." They consider it the most democratic and satisfactory way of setting minimum wages yet devised.

Of the 113 industry committees appointed under the present Fair Labor Standards Act, two thirds were unanimous in their recommendations to the administrator concerning the minimum wage to be adopted. A majority of both labor and industry members of most of the remaining committees supported the comtee recommendations. In the recent hearings before the House and Senate Labor Committees, both employer and labor witnesses have been strong in their support of retaining the industry committee provisions.

Asian Loss, Europe's Hope

By Andre Visson

China and Germany

THE CLIMAX of the Communist victory in China brings into sharper focus the problem of Germany. Having failed to prevent the collapse of anti-Communist China, and facing increasing danger in Asia, the Western world, led by the United States, must achieve its objectives in Germany if it is to consolidate the victory of the anti-Communist forces in western Europe. Only the victory of anti-Communist forces in Germany can counterbalance the Communist victory in China.

The men responsible for American foreign policy are trying to comfort themselves with the idea that China will remain what it has always been—a political, social, economic and strategic morass that will gradually suck in the Communist drive. But Germany, despite the perplexity and confusion of its political and social situation, is no morass. It is a springboard. And only complete control of the Western democracies can compensate for our loss of China.

There is, however, only one effective means of insuring that the Western democracies will continue to control the German springboard. That is to turn Germany into a Western democracy. We are just beginning to realize what a difficult assignment this may prove to be. But we dare not give up hope. The day we gave up hope of seeing a democratic China capable, with our aid, of defending herself, we lost China. If we ever reach the tragic conclusion that Germany cannot be transformed into a Western democracy, we will have to write off not only Germany but the rest of western Europe.

TO BE SURE, the conditions in Germany, despite the many obstacles in our way, are infinitely more favorable for realizing our objectives than were the conditions in China. Germany was at one time a democracy. China only dreamed of becoming one.

Germany, after the Napoleonic wars, developed a strong national feeling and achieved unity after the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. China, despite her war with Japan, failed to achieve national unity. In Germany the democrats have memories of great historical traditions, in spite of the black record of the last decades. In China democracy had to be built from scratch.

Our objective in China was the strengthening of the lamentably frail democratic elements. These weak and unorganized Chinese democrats were tragically squeezed between the ruthless and dynamic Communists on the Left and the corrupt and inefficient reactionaries on the Right. Finally, China was our ally, to whom we could only offer friendly advice. Germany is a defeated enemy to whom we can still give some orders.

Unfortunately, democracy cannot be achieved by orders, especially from foreigners. Democracy will always be the political expression of strong convictions. Moreover, throughout the entire nineteenth century democracy was identified with legitimate national aspirations.

In the latter part of the nineteenth century when democracy had been established in most of western and central Europe, national aspirations began to gain ascendancy over democratic conceptions. The Germans and the Italians let themselves be seduced by the idea that national aspirations were the predominant factor in their lives.

The frustrations suffered by Germans and Italians after the First World War created a moral climate favorable to nationalism. The man in the street gradually lost his critical judgment to the point of being unable to distinguish between legitimate and illegitimate national aspirations. Furthermore, the presence of a foreign soldier acts on the national consciousness like a grain of sand in an oystershell. But the "pearls" which form around these grains of sand are not "democratic pearls." They are strictly "nationalistic pearls."

WE ARE once again making this sad discovery in Germany. To be sure, the Soviets are making the same discovery. But while we respect the will of the majority, they ruthlessly brush it aside. And if they are unable to break a hostile majority, they try to lure it into cooperation with the objective of eventually bringing it under domination. This is what they are now trying to do in Germany.

Fortunately, the political leaders in western Germany realized that they had to accept the proposals of the Western democracies even if they found them unsatisfactory. But they are convinced that the strongest political party in liberated Germany will be the one most vocally resistant to the foreign military occupants, as well as loudest in defense of German national rights. This is why Dr. Karl Schumacher, the shrewd and embittered leader of the German Socialists, is trying to impress on the German people that the Christian Democrats are mainly responsible for the compromise with the Western powers.

It is hoped in Washington that all anti-Communist Germans will realize that while it is true that the Western world needs Germany, Germany needs the Western world even more. As democratic countries we cannot forcibly impose our democratic ideas on the Germans. But neither can they force us to pay them too high a price for insuring their survival as a free nation.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Truman Against Special Session

By Drew Pearson

DESPITE THE WARNINGS of his Senate leaders that Congress faced a special session, President Truman recently indicated to Jim Patton, head of the Farmers Union, that he doesn't favor either a prolonged session of Congress or a special session.

"It's hard to tell at this stage," observed Mr. Truman, "but I look for adjournment early in July."

Asked if he might call a special session, Mr. Truman replied with a grin, this was unlikely, and that the next session of Congress in January "would have to have something to do."

Patton told the President that Brannan's farm program would greatly strengthen the farm support the Democrats received in the last campaign and also attract a heavy consumers' vote in 1950.

"This is the first time a Secretary of Agriculture has coupled cheaper food for consumers in a farm program," declared the Farmers Union president. "Everybody," he added jokingly, "is against the program except the farmers, the consumers and the National Farmers Union."

"Well, our big job is getting the program through Congress, so that all three—the working man, the farmer and the consumer—will get a decent break," observed Truman. "I don't think this Congress will fall down on the job."

Mr. Truman expressed particular pleasure with the protection that the Brannan program gives to small, family-type farmers, "who always have been at a disadvantage dealing with the big (commercial farm) operators."

Perhaps Mr. Truman recalled how he failed to keep up with mortgage payments when he was a small farmer himself.

Switching to foreign affairs, Truman said he wasn't sure the Chinese Communists would cooperate with Moscow—in other words, Stalin might have an oversized Yugoslavia on his hands.

He also promised to consider seriously a Patton proposal that he give financial assistance to India under the aid-to-backward-nations program.

"If we raise living standards in India by even 2 or 3 per cent," argued the Farmers Union chief, "we in turn would benefit from an increased export market for our goods. Nehru is not only the greatest force for peace in the Far East, but a great world leader. However, in supporting India or any other nation, I hope we will operate as much as possible through the United Nations, rather than on a strict bilateral basis."

"That's exactly the way I feel about it," Truman agreed. "Our aid to other nations must in no sense be imperialistic."

An Earlier Cold War

AT LAKE SUCCESS, the General Assembly was debating the establishment of a special military guard, for the protection of U. N. officers serving in places of danger.

Listening with one earphone was French Delegate Pierre Ordonneau, who happens also to be one of the world's foremost collectors of lead soldiers which he has decorated by hand in faithful reproduction of the armies of history.

Suddenly, Ordonneau perceived a friend entering the chamber, beckoned to him, leaned forward, and whispered:

"I've got some exciting news."

"What?"

"I have just received Napoleon's Army retreating from Moscow."

"What are you talking about? What has that got to do with the military guard?"

"Nothing, my friend, nothing, but it's much more exciting."

The lead soldiers which Delegate Ordonneau had just received dealt with the outcome of another cold war more than a hundred years ago.

Prestige Or Unification?

WITH KENNETH ROYALL and John Sullivan out as secretaries of the Army and Navy, the Senate Armed Services Committee is now debating whether to take some of the glory out of these jobs.

The question was left undecided, however, after a clash of views behind closed doors.

Chairman Millard Tydings of Maryland favored leaving the secretaries of the three services alone. Unification can be achieved, he argued, without reducing the titles of the three secretaries and striking a blow at their prestige.

"It is unification of functions that counts," declared Tydings.

Massachusetts' lean Leverett Saltonstall agreed that the three secretaries shouldn't be stripped of their high-sounding titles, but his Republican colleague, Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon, broke in sharply.

"The motion to keep the secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force," he barked, "would make unification impossible for the very reason argued by the Senator from Maryland—to give prestige to the offices. I say, if you want unification, you have to take prestige away from these offices. In the military establishment, it is title, brass, number of stars and bars, position and prestige that constitutes the nucleus upon which, by accretion of power and jurisdiction, you destroy unification.

"The military mind," warned Morse, "thinks in terms of position and not functions. The longer you keep the secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force, the more the officers around them will take on assumption of power. If you want true unification, make the three secretaries truly subordinate to the Secretary of Defense and Undersecretary of Defense by making them assistants."

"There is some merit," admitted Tydings, "to what the Senator from Oregon says. But we can't get good men without giving them the prestige."

Virginia's ruddy Senator Harry Byrd finally broke in: "I don't see why we have to decide this now. Let's look into the question of functions," he urged, "and save this until last."

The committee postponed a vote until later.

Note—Self-effacing Secretary for Air Stuart Symington is the only secretary who has urged that he be reduced in rank. He suggests that he be demoted to "Undersecretary for Air."

Weaker Vessel Trims Her Sales

By Paul Gallico

I DO not quite understand why we have a tendency to look down our noses at women and classify them as simpletons, albeit beautiful ones, when it comes to brains and knowing their way about.

Take, for instance, such a small item as shopping, or the purchase of anything whatsoever, and consider the totally different approach of the so-called intelligent man and the simple-minded female.

To sum it all up for you before we start going into the horrible details, the gent is a sucker for anything and everything by anyone. A woman won't buy until she has tracked down the original antecedents of the article, felt it, smelled it, handled it, discussed it, beefed, squawked and hollered and practically accused the sales person of trying to swindle her.

You talk about being simple-minded — that is the condition that appears to overtake any man who enters a store. Not only does the most astute of businessmen become a dope of the first water in the presence of a salesman of whatever, but he also becomes afflicted with a bad case of moral cowardice at the same time.

With Doodle Feather

A MAN buying a hat or a suit is positively a pitiful object. He is clay in the hands of the vendor. He would no more dare say to the fellow, "Look here, I said I want a gray hat with a wide brim. You take all those brown, blue and green hats with the narrow brims and doodle feathers you've been handing down and burn 'em. And doggone it, you gimme the hat I want or I'll be out of here faster than you can see." Oh no. He gets himself sold the green hat with the doodle feather.

A man isn't even his own master in his domain, the sporting goods store. He will buy all the wrong kind of fishing tackle and lures at the merest hint from the salesperson, golf clubs that are much too good for him, tennis racquets meant only to be used by champions and guns he will never be able to shoot.

For some unfathomable reason, the man who goes into a store feels that it is some kind of crime to investigate the object that is being offered for sale or to inquire into whether or not he is getting the worth of his money in the purchase. He is convinced that the salesperson will take him for a cheapskate, a chiseler, a pike and a crab if he questions a single word of the boloney that is being sliced up for him in the shape of sales talk.

And as for those awful moments when the salesperson is a female—of any appearance from cutie-pie to battle-ax, and any vintage—he is positively pulverized and crawls in her presence. He asks nothing more than to hand over his money and get out of there.

Thus it is childishly easy to stick him and pin him down to paying twice as much as he ever intended spending for something simply because in a few moments he has been shamed into buying the special super-de-luxe model with the built-in something or other, at $14, when the one for $5.98 would have fulfilled his needs exactly.

A Sale of Sweebles

NOW observe the little lady on the same quest for an object she wants or needs. We like to believe her a little weakminded and sometimes hardly able to find her way from the corner of Main to Chesnut Street, but she enters the emporium fairly bristling with sales resistance.

At the counter she asks in a firm voice for a package of Amargerated Sweebles. The clerk places the package on the counter and says, "That will be $3, madame.'

"Three dollars! Why I never heard of such a thing. Swaps' Third Avenue is selling them for $1.98 . . ."

"Possibly, madame, but everything has gone up. There's been a scarcity of sweebles, you know."

"Oh, there has, has there? Now see here, young man. Don't you try to tell me anything like that. The Government report in the Gazette last week said there had been the biggest crop of sweebles in all history this past season."

"Quite possible, madame. I don't read the Gazette. But you asked for Amargerated Sweebles. That makes quite a difference."

"Oh, it does, does it? Well, how do I know those are Amargerated?"

"It says so right here on the box, madame."

"I can see that, but that doesn't prove anything. Anybody can print anything they want on a box, and then put anything they like inside it. Just open it up and let me see first of all if there are sweebles in it, and second whether they are really amargerated. For three dollars they ought to amargerate them twice and lock in some sealed vitamins besides."

"I am sorry, madame, but if I open the box it will be spoiled. We cannot open packages for inspect . . ."

"Oh, you can't, can't you? Young man, I thought you were trying to conceal something from me all along. I want the manager. First you try to overcharge me and then you want to sell me a cat in a bag . . ."

The manager comes along at that point, hearing his name, and says, "What's the matter here, Jones? What? Sweebles at three dollars? Of course not, Madame. You are quite right. Mr. Jones is new in this department. We are selling them at a dollar forty-nine. Yes, madame. I'll have it wrapped for you."

That's little bright-eyes. Simple-minded, eh?

Looking at the South

No Phony Magnolias

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, MISS., April 30. By and large, Hollywood's representations of the South have been limited to two kinds of stories. One is the historical spectacle, laid in ole Virginny, wicked N'walyns or hoop-skirted Natchez. The other is the Tobacco Road approach, frequently truer to life and at times done with feeling, but restricted to the vicissitudes, the elemental struggles and the pathetic humor of the poor white of the hills and the worn fields.

Neither theme actually deals fairly with the South, for one is a romanticized harking to the past, and the other a limited present-day realism. Hollywood's South is, moreover, a place of incredible accents, of exaggerated behavior and even of mountains in Mississippi.

And such treatment does more than make us natives shudder. The movies, for better or worse, are an important American medium not only of mass entertainment but of mass information, and too many theatergoers accept what they see as accurate.

Taut, Honest Story

ALL OF THIS is by way of introduction to a new Southern movie, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer dramatization of William Faulkner's "Intruder In the Dust," which is nearing completion in Oxford, Miss. The story is a taut, honest one, wherein a young Southern boy and an aging spinster prevent the probable lynching of a Negro accused of murder by discovering the real slayer. Of all the novels to come out of the South in recent years, I have read none which so accurately presents the Southern character and the complexities of our human relationships in addition to telling an exciting tale.

And this time Hollywood apparently intends to do full justice to such a story. Certainly the people of Oxford have already been impressed. William Faulkner lives in Oxford and is a legend there, but the citizens were not sure that they would like what Hollywood would make of his novel and there was some apprehension and resentment over the invasion.. But Director-Producer Clarence Brown, his technical staff and his cast not only allayed suspicious but enrolled what would appear to be half the town in bit and group parts.

At least 12 Oxford citizens, including students, professional and businessmen, a university professor and a deputy sheriff have minor roles. The sets are authentic—the beautiful old Oxford courthouse, the jail, a cemetery, the town square, an outlying farm, a lawyer's office, a barbershop, a gracious private home—and this means that neither the artificial magnolia blossom nor the sagging cabin will dominate the locale.

Promising Cycle

AND the accents will be as authentic as the background. Young Claude Jarman, jr., who proved himself in "The Yearling," comes from Nashville. Dan White, who has a principal role, is from Florida; Elizabeth Patterson, who plays the determined spinster, is from Savannah, and Director Brown is Tennessee born and bred. At the least, the audience will be spared the Broadway-English-Hollywood interpretation of "you-all," which is a triumph in itself.

Maybe this isn't very important. But here is a picturization of a novel by the South's preeminent author. The story is one that must be understandingly presented. And a Hollywood company has decided to do its best by the author, the story and the region involved.

If the next cycle of movies is to deal with Southern themes and Southern problems, as seems likely, "Intruder in the Dust" may aid greatly in compelling a proper perspective in those to follow.

But let's keep our fingers crossed Somebody may want to ban it because it is too sympathetic.

The Gallup Poll

What's a Lobbyist?

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

HOW much public resentment is there against the lobbyists in Washington?

Although President Truman has repeatedly lambasted the "special interests"—his most recent attack was on the real estate lobby—a public opinion survey finds that only a little more than half of the Nation's voters know what a lobbyist is.

Among those who do know, the weight of opinion condemns lobbies as a bad influence.

The lobbying activities best known to the general public are those conducted by labor unions, farm organizations, the real estate interests, railroads and other businesses, and the veterans' organizations.

Questioning showed that 45 per cent said they did not know what a lobbyist in Washington is.

"Can you recall off-hand some of the different groups or organizations which have (or hire) lobbyists?"

This question produced answers as follows:

Labor unions	15%
Farmers	9
Big business in general, industry	8
Real estate, landlords	7
Railroads	4
Veterans' organizations	4
Oil companies	4
Public utilities	3
Nat'l Assn. of Manufacturers (NAM)	3
Steel companies	3
Dairy interests	3
Margarine interests	2
Miscellaneous	16
Can't recall any	18
Don't know what lobbyist is	45
	144%

The table adds to more than 100 per cent because some voters mentioned more than one lobby.

Voters were next asked what in their opinion are some of the best arguments for and against lobbyists.

The chief arguments in favor were: (1) they present valuable factual information to Congress, (2) they are needed to spur important legislation, (3) minority rights should be represented and protected.

The main arguments opposed were: (1) they push legislation which is not for the benefit of the people, (2) they promote graft, corruption and bribery, (3) they are too powerful; we have too much "government by pressure groups."

The next question was:

"In general, do you think lobbyists serve a useful purpose or do they represent a bad influence on Congress?"

The following table gives the total vote and the vote of those who have some knowledge of what a lobbyist is.

Useful purpose	15%	27%
Bad influence	25	46
No opinion	15	27
	55%	100%
Don't know what lobbyist is	45%

Differences by educational groups are shown in the following table:

	College	High School	Grade School
Useful purpose	34%	16%	8%
Bad influence	42	29	18
No opinion	17	17	12
	93%	62%	38%
Don't know what lobbyist is	7%	38%	62%

Matter of Fact

Carrier Decision Was Easy One

By Joseph Alsop

DEFENSE SECRETARY LOUIS JOHNSON has been making the easy decisions so far. He has shifted offices. He has abolished boards. He has put a burr under the tail of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to hasten them in their task of evolving a unified strategic concept. And now he has stopped work on the Navy's giant carrier.

It may seem odd to call this last decision easy, when it has caused so much commotion. But a simple listing of the factors involved will show why the decision was simple to the point of being unavoidable. At any rate, it was unavoidable if Johnson wished to live up to the rather idealized picture of go-getting public service which he has been painting of himself.

Among the factors against the carrier, cost was most obvious. The price tag on the carrier itself was between 150 and 200 million dollars. The aircraft to fly from it had not been perfected, but were expected to cost a great many millions more. Then the vast, expensive vessel, with its valuable cargo, could not but be singularly vulnerable to air and submarine attack. And this would create a need for a multifarious, staggeringly expensive supporting force of flak ships, smaller carriers to provide fighter protection, destroyer and other escort, etc.

Still One-Way Tactics

THE over-all investment in the carrier task force was estimated to run from 1.5 to 2 billion dollars. Yet the technical difficulties were such that the carrier's bombers were not expected to be able to land on her decks again after take-off. Thus the whole huge armada would have been able to make only a single strike before returning to port, so diminishing the return on the investment.

Then, on a deeper level, there was the carrier's relationship to what the experts call the broader weapons system. What the carrier was designed to do is approximately what a B-36 can do already. It could hardly have been ready to do even that in less than five years. Meanwhile B-47s and other new bombers in the testing stage are already promising to render the B-36 obsolete. Thus the carrier would have been employed, at uneconomic expense, to do the same job other now projected weapons will be capable of performing far better.

But even this was not decisive. The final argument against the giant carrier was that it represented the Navy's rather desperate, wholly natural effort to take over a non-naval mission—to play a major part, in short, in a war with a non-naval, continental, land power, the Soviet Union. The carrier plan, essentially, was a plan for a whale to arm itself to attack an elephant.

In an ideal situation, in which resources were unlimited, the arguments in favor of the carrier would certainly have outweighed the disadvantages which have been listed. But resources are not unlimited, even if we abandon our present dangerous system of business-as-usual. We cannot continue to use the last war planning process.

Then, when there was a deep disagreement on the correct solution of a given problem, both proposed solutions were tried, without serious attempt to reach a compromise on a single solution. But that way of doing business is now too expensive.

Questions of Balance

THIS is the reason in turn for the Joint Chiefs of Staff's sweaty struggle to agree upon a unified strategic concept, of which the end of the giant carrier project may be called the first fruits. For Secretary Johnson, the really difficult decisions are ahead, simply because this struggle toward a unified strategic concept must involve other, far more painful steps.

Two chief issues are involved. First, is the quantity of our carrier aviation out of balance with the Navy's primary mission, which is to maintain control of the seas? Second, is the size of the Marine Corps out of balance with the Marines' mission, of making landings and taking bridgeheads?

Both carrier and Marine forces are today on a scale conditioned by the Pacific operation of the last war. But unless our Far Eastern policy is downright suicidal, we shall have no Pacific problem in another war. And carriers and Marines cannot be used against the Russian land mass as they were against Japanese-held islands. Putting down Russian submarines will be the naval task.

There are other issues also. For example, are the bombardment-trained generals who now dominate the Air Force slighting tactical aviation, which the ground forces need, in favor of their beloved strategic aviation? In every one of these issues, violent prejudices and intense sentiments are involved. In each case, the arguments against a clean-cut decision are much stronger in the case of the giant carrier.

Yet there must be clean-cut decisions; there must be bold gambles on single solutions of these problems. A series of competing attempts to half-do a job are hardly better than not doing the job at all. The carrier decision at least presages recognition of this crucial fact.

Tooth Decay Laid to 'Explosions'

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK, April 30.—The chances of controlling the explosions in your teeth are looking up.

The explosions are tooth decay. Most dentists now believe that decay doesn't go on steadily all the time, day and night. Rather it seems to happen explosively with the damage starting three to five minutes after you eat foods containing refined sugars and carbohydrates.

The general idea is that decay comes mainly from acids acting on tooth enamel. These acids are formed when certain bacteria in the mouth go to work fermenting the sugars and carbohydrates.

Several new ways are being tried to stop it. Most are aimed at breaking up this cycle. Researchers report from 35 to 90 per cent reductions in the rate of tooth decay in their early tests.

HERE'S how we stand right now: Weak solutions of sodium fluoride, applied to children's teeth, reduce decay about 40 per cent. It works only for children up to 12. How long the protection lasts isn't settled.

A second method is tooth powders that give a chemical "boost" to a natural defense against decay. In initial tests, one formula helped four out of five people, adults and children, and brought an average 35 per cent reduction in decay.

The chemical boost comes from ammonium ions and urea in the powders. These prevent the lactobacillus acidophilus bacteria from growing. They also help to neutralize acids as they are formed. Everyone's saliva contains some urea. The people who don't get decay have more of it. They also have much fewer of the bacteria.

Third among the newcomers is the idea of creating chemical roadblocks on the tooth enamel. This is based on a different theory of tooth decay. It is that bacteria invade tiny channels of living matter between the rods of tooth enamel.

The chemicals used are zinc chloride and potassium ferrocyanide, and must be applied by a dentist. They are supposed to form an impenetrable barrier at the opening of the channels in the enamel. The developer of the method reports up to 90 per cent reductions in tooth decay in people treated this way. The method is being studied on hundreds of persons in several cities.

If sugar is not eaten at all, the lactobacillus acidopholus bacteria literally starve to death. People on starvation diets during the war, getting no sugars, had little or no dental decay.

Maryland's State Health Plan

HEALTH, From Page One

antagonism to the medical profession was very widespread.

Began With Indigent

THE medical leaders were shocked into immediate action. As Maryland has a State Planning Commission which is authorized to study any civic problem, they requested the chairman, Abel Wolman, professor of sanitary engineering at Johns Hopkins, to appoint a standing committee on medical care, with Dr. Maurice C. Pinkoffs, professor of medicine at the Maryland University School of Medicine, as chairman, to study the health situation throughout the State.

After three years of the most painstaking research into the health conditions prevailing in the counties of Maryland, the committee decided that a State program should begin by serving the most helpless segment of the population. It therefore outlined a clearly defined medical care program for the State's indigent and medically indigent throughout the 23 counties, to be financed by State funds. In presenting the report, the committee stated:

"We are using the term 'medical care' in an inclusive sense to cover all the agencies available in safeguarding and improving the health of the people and in the treatment of disease. It may be interpreted, therefore, as comprising lay and professional medical education, sanitation, preventive medicine, curative medicine, dental and nursing care and pharmacy. It is evident that there exist today, and, in view of the rapid advances in medical science, that there will always exist difficulties in making available to all the highest standard of medical care. It would be the function of such a committee as we propose to be constantly comparing what is available in the way of medical care in our State with what is known to be valuable and to plan systematically to repair the deficiencies in our present system."

The committee also stressed as "vital that the program for such State-supported improvements in our present system of medical care be devised so as to conserve all of the valuable assets we now possess and not be planned in a manner which would set one form of medical service in competition with another to their mutual disadvantage."

The whole program, indorsed by the State medical society, was passed by the State Legislature in 1945. As the problems of medical care in the City of Baltimore were far more complex, the committee members, hard pressed by the advent of war, did not make their report on that situation until 1947. Thus the State program has been in operation 3½ years and that of Baltimore City about six months.

Flexibility Essential

IN THINKING out the administration, it is evident to anyone studying its results that two major objectives were kept in mind that seem fundamental to any national health program. Since the treatment of disease involves not only physical but powerful emotional disturbances, no system of health protection can be effective which imposes a rigid, universal pattern of procedure and ignores the individuality and the varying needs of the people. And, secondly, an administrative system that fails to provide for the professional development of the practicing physician, for consultation services and clinics, for freedom of research and ready access to the latest achievements of research, will defeat its own ends because it would freeze our medical progress at its present state of evolution.

Therefore we must try to understand the skeletal structure of Maryland's new health program before we try to evaluate its spirit and ultimate value.

The State Department of Health was asked to formulate and administer the program for the counties, as this department seemed the logical organization to integrate the State's whole facilities for health protection. The Department of Welfare was given the responsibility of certifying its relief clients. The more difficult certification of the medically indigent was assigned to the Department of Health. Services include not only complete coverage of free medical and dental care but essential supplies, drugs and biologicals.

To implement the program, the State board of health was authorized to establish an advisory council on medical care, constituted as follows: Two members from the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty, the State board of health and the two medical schools; one hospital administrator, one dentist and one nurse appointed by their official organizations; the director of the State Department of Welfare, the commissioner of mental hygiene and the superintendent of the tuberculosis sanitoria, and one member appointed by the Maryland Medical Association.

Thus the advisory council had State-wide representation of the highest type and experience. Its special function was to integrate the many agencies on the State level concerned with health.

To administer the program, a bureau of medical care was established under the State Department of Health, whose chief executive must be a doctor, experienced in the organization and distribution of medical care on a full-time basis.

Council Is Cornerstone

HOW has the State Department of Health approached its problem of providing medical care to those citizens of the State whose own financial resources are inadequate? It has recognized from the outset that the services must be efficient if the clients were to be satisfied, and economical, if it was not to meet opposition from the taxpaying public. At the same time, it had to gain the voluntary cooperation of the local physicians, dentists, nurses, pharmacists and hospitals upon whom the whole operation depended.

Dr. Dean Roberts, who was appointed chief of the bureau of medical services, traveled the length and breadth of the State to stimulate the interest in the program of these various groups. He is the link between the county health officers and the State authorities. It is also his duty to review the scope and course of the program for the advisory council, which he sees as the very cornerstone of the whole administrative system.

Composed of 14 top-flight representatives of the public and private professional groups from all parts of the State, the council has no actual authority, but its recommendations have always been made on the basis of such intensive study of the many problems involved that they have, on the whole, been adopted without modification. The council meets every month to review the program and hear Dr. Roberts' reports. He brings to its attention every major operating problem and reports upon ideas for expansion that are frequently suggested by the county health officers and their local advisory councils. Every significant policy, eligibility criteria, method of application, scope of services offered, rates of payment to doctors, dentists and druggists, method of payment and other important administrative details are threshed out at these council meetings.

Since the inception of the program, both the State Department of Health and its advisory council have felt that the medical care program is in constant evolution. Thus all policies are continually under review and changes are made whenever necessary. Both make a conscious effort to keep the program from crystallizing too rapidly, and it is precisely this ability to adjust the program to new needs that has been the secret of its success.

Intimate Relationship

THIS flexibilty is attained by decentralization and placing authority in the hands of the county health officers, all of whom in Maryland are physicians and full-time employes, intimately acquainted with the local population and its medical problems. In county after county the doctors told me that, from their point of view, the success of the program rests upon the respect of the private practitioners for the local health officer. Moreover, they feel that the program is their program, since they are represented on the local advisory council, which guides the development of all new policies and keeps them within the area of agreement.

The fact that the whole program originated with the State medical society is an important factor in the psychology of the local practitioners. But they were frank to confess that their willingness to cooperate in a State program was accelerated by the hope of avoiding compulsory national health insurance. Some still have fears that the program may get out of their control and encroach upon their private practice unless they keep a careful eye upon all major decisions. But many agree that the contact through the local advisory councils with the grange, the county agent, the white and colored superintendents of schools, with the welfare departments and the voluntary health organizations has made them more conscious of the social organization of their counties and of the social responsibilities of the medical profession.

"Politics can be kept out of the program," said several others, "only because this decentralization permits local supervision by nonpolitical people. It also keeps the program flexible and responsive to local needs. The wholehearted cooperation of local professional people can only be preserved by this local control and guidance."

Partly, therefore, out of fear, but predominantly out of the growing interest of the county medical societies, these local advisory councils have developed into highly significant groups which concern themselves not only with the curative program but with the causes of illness, with the cause of poverty, ignorance of proper diet, bad housing and bad sanitary conditions that prevail in many of the rural counties. The advisory councils bring to bear upon these problems many public and private agencies which had previously functioned without knowledge of each other's activities.

Attitude Has Changed

THESE articles will attempt to describe not only the impact of this humane medical experiment upon the people who benefit directly by its provisions, but the many unforeseen effects upon the standards of medical practice, the changing attitude of the private practioners toward the public health officials and the sense of pride the medical men feel in the efficiency and economy of this State program for the systematic care of people who were formerly dependent upon their charity. The responsibility of government to provide care for the indigent and medically indigent has become generally accepted. And a voluntary, working partnership has been created between the medical profession and the health representatives of the State.

The importance of this step—given the hostility between these two groups in most other States—cannot be overemphasized. It demonstrates that the impasse between government and medicine can be overcome and agreement achieved of far-reaching implications, when a step-by-step approach is made to the larger need for complete health coverage in the States and the Nation.

It was this sense of the far-reaching implications of the Maryland State health program that led the chairman of the committee on medical care to say in his letter of transmission of his initial report to the State Planning Commission:

"While we propose the use of Government funds only for the care of the indigent and medically indigent, we believe this use, in the manner suggested in the body of this report, will encourage more effective integration of all the State's medical resources, private, voluntary and governmental, and assure more and better health services to all our citizens."

TOMORROW: What does the Maryland health plan for the care of the indigent and medically indigent mean to the people?

Southwest's Picturesque Sage Robs Nation's Steak Platters

By Robert E. Ford

Associated Press Staff Writer

DALLAS, April 30.—You've heard those songs about bloom on the sage. The travel ad pictures of cactus are pretty, too, aren't they?

Enjoy them, folks. They're costing you dough, whether you live in the Bronx, Savannah, Chicago or Amarillo.

Cedar and mesquite alone are costing Texas ranchers 115 million dollars a year. Add the sage and cactus, and the liveoak, Spanish oak, red oak, post oak, blue oak, cresote, tarbush, whitebrush, blackbrush, agarita, yaupon, catclaw, hog plum, persimmon, huisache, ganjeno, Brazil bush, soapbush, false willow, McCartney rose, blackjack oak, retama and prickly pear and the toll is terrific.

These plants are adding millions annually to the Nation's food bill. Wherever they grow they reduce the number of cattle that can be grazed. That means higher meat prices.

Some experts estimate that these noxious plants are costing the ranchers as much as 300 million dollars a year in Texas alone. Almost a third of Texas rangeland is infested with them.

The reason these plants are so costly is that where they grow, grass can't. When these plants destroy the grass, the soil washes away. Soon the topsoil is gone and the land is worthless.

A recent publication by the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station at College Station says that if only cedar and mesquite were eradicated, Texas meat production would increase 400 million pounds annually.

Before the white man came, millions of acres of Texas land were covered with knee-high forage grass. The grass was so thick that the undesirable plants couldn't grow well.

Then severe droughts and cold weather damaged the grass. Great areas were burned off. The ranges were overstocked. Floods, windstorms, animals and birds spread the seed of malignant plants, which took hold in the damaged rangelands.

These rob grasses of water, soil food and sunlight. It's a vicious circle that finds grasses always the losers.

The problem seems simple. Why not just cut down the trees, bushes and plants?

Do that and you're in for more trouble. The mesquite root bud has eyes like a potato. Cut down a mesquite bush and you may have 50 or more in its place—a new plant growing from each eye.

Texas range specialists are fighting back, but it's slow, rugged work. They've developed power machinery to dig out the root bud of the mesquite. These plows are fairly effective. But there are about 55 million acres infested with mesquite. The equipment is expensive.

The newest hope is the chemical agents 2, 4-D and 2, 4, 5-5. These are hormone-type sprays which control growth. They don't kill the root bud of a mesquite. However, forestry and range experts believe they are the most fertile field for research in sight. If they can be developed to where they will prevent regrowth, then cheap, mass application will be profitable.

A WARNING to advocates of world government is issued by Warren Austin, head of the United States delegation to the United Nations, in Harper's. World government is all very well, argues Senator Austin, but the need for action is upon us now. The defeatist attitude toward the U. N. of some world government enthusiasts "can be as obstructive as the defeatism of the isolationists . . . I would be willing to state categorically that any activity that threatens the United Nations is dangerous and any activity that deprives it of support is wasteful."

Fred M. Hechinger criticizes the press bitterly for printing "All the News That Fits the Pattern." If realities don't conform to editors' ideas of them, charges Hechinger, those realities never see the light of American newsprint. In a sharply worded article, the author says that the same lack of understanding that led the press astray on the election, is being applied to foreign affairs now.

Experiments on rats at Cornell have shown that a low calorie diet can double the life span of a rat, says James Rorty. He indicates the way to a long, healthy but not very merry life for human beings.

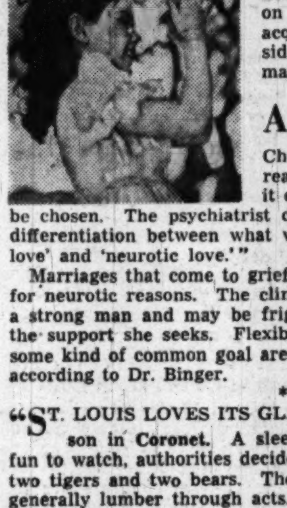
AND WHEN it comes to longer lives, statistics show that women outlast men either because they are more resistant to disease, or because they lead easier lives, says George Lawton in Reader's Digest. As luxuries become necessities, American women do less and less, live longer. But the man, struggling to keep up the pace, dies of heart disease. It's condensed from the New York Times magazine.



"The Lost 15 Minutes," by Anthony Abbott, condensed from Argosy, tells how the drug sodium pentathol, used on a man accused of murder, got him acquitted. The evidence was not considered adequate to convict another man, however.

AS MIGHT be expected, Dr. Carl Binger's "A Doctor's Advice on Choosing a Mate," in McCall's, doesn't really tell you how to choose one. But it outlines requirements before one can be chosen. The psychiatrist contributes, as he says, "toward the differentiation between what we might for the moment call 'real love' and 'neurotic love.'"

Marriages that come to grief, he points out, are often contracted for neurotic reasons. The clinging vine, for instance, may choose a strong man and may be frightened by his strength or not find the support she seeks. Flexibility, maturity of both partners and some kind of common goal are requirements for a stable marriage, according to Dr. Binger.

"ST. LOUIS LOVES ITS GLAMOUR ZOO," writes Harry B. Wilson in Coronet. A sleeping or sitting animal is not much fun to watch, authorities decided. So the lions perform daily with two tigers and two bears. The elephants play baseball, bowl, and generally lumber through acts. Iron bars have been discarded in favor of natural settings. The result: about three times the population of St. Louis visits the zoo each year.

For almost half a century, the idea of the zipper tantalized and baffled some of the best engineering minds in the country. Bertram Vogel tells how it was finally invented.

SENATOR ROBERT A. TAFT tells "Why We're Fighting Truman" in three tightly printed Look pages. He dubs the Truman program "a series of police state measures to attain Utopia, which, taken together, would completely destroy liberty in the United States, impair justice and equality and subject every American family to the dictates of an all-powerful state."

The principal task of Congress, in Taft's view, is a negative one, to prevent the proposed changes. He substitutes a five-point program of his own which he believes might be enacted "over the violent opposition of the Administration."

AFTER A FEW YEARS of trying to be a model mother, Charlotte Paul gave up, she reveals in Good Housekeeping. Children must learn through participation, was one tenet taken by the willing mother from the books. A child too young to wash dishes is at the perfect age for participation therein, she found. Of course, she later discovered, the child's interest wanes as his ability grows, and comes to a sharp, screeching halt when he can do it well.

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

Other rules such as, "Don't spank a child, reason with him," "Encourage the child's imagination" (adult imagination against a child's is a mouse squaring off with a panther) and "Be young with your children" were all tried by the lady, who wound up by letting her 2-year-old sit on the book at the dinner table.

"A model mother," opines Mrs. Paul, "is one who never spanks her child where the bruise will show."

Toynbee Heads Speaker List For 'Book and Author Night'

"BOOK and Author Night," an outstanding event of the annual American Booksellers Association convention, will be open to the public for the first time this year. The convention will be held here May 15-18.

Book and Author Night, to be held at Constitution Hall May 17, will present Arnold Toynbee, who has been called "the greatest living historian;" Esther Forbes, a Pulitzer Prize historian as well as a novelist; John Mason Brown, the theater and book critic; Quentin Reynolds, the foreign correspondent, and Munro Leaf, author of the well-remembered "Ferdinand."

Master of ceremonies will be Philip L. Graham, publisher of The Washington Post, which will cosponsor the evening. The Washington Post also sponsors the Book and Author Luncheons.

Arnold Toynbee, author of "A Study in History" and "Civilization on Trial," dates his interest in international affairs to a visit to Greece in 1912, when the Balkans were buzzing with talk of England's foreign policy. Miss Forbes, whose latest book is "The Running of the Tide," had written five successful novels before she was awarded the 1942 Pulitzer Prize for "Paul Revere and the World in Which He Lived."

Mr. Brown, who has a Nation-wide reputation as a writer and lecturer, has a new book, "Morning Faces," coming out in September. Mr. Reynolds, whose foreign correspondence is well known to newspaper and magazine readers, is the author of "Leave It to the People."

Mr. Leaf, a Maryland-born Washingtonian whose lovable Ferdinand the Bull liked to sniff flowers, is the author of a new book which sniffs at the comic books. "Sam and the Superdroop" is the title.

Use of Constitution Hall will make available 3500 seats which will be sold to the public at $1, $1.80 and $2.40, including tax. Regular sessions of the ABA convention will be at the Shoreham, where the exhibits of 200 publishing houses will be opened to the public May 19.

Spare That Wood

IF YOU think anyone is fooling about the paper shortage in England, consider "Hordubal," "Meteor" and "An Ordinary Life," by Karel Capek, issued in one volume called "Three Novels." Distributed here by A. A. Wyn, in commemoration of the death of the author in 1938, the book bears a jacket marked, "Printed in Great Britain." The jacket is printed on the reverse side of a piece of a map of Denmark, evidently cut from a volume of maps and marked Sheet 53.

Soviet Verse In Anthology

A TREASURY OF RUSSIAN VERSE, edited by Avrahm Yarmolinsky. Macmillan. 314 pp. $5.

AVRAHM YARMOLINSKY, veteran chief of the New York Public Library's Slavonic division, and his wife, the poet Babette Deutsch, are experienced workers in the field of Russian poetry. In the present volume they have again worked together, he as editor, she as translator of most of the poems.

Most of the versions that appeared in earlier editions of their anthology, "Modern Russian Poetry," have been tightened up, or even freshly translated, and with added contemporary material the result is an up-to-date book. Emphasis has been placed on the spirit of the original poems, rather than on literalness of translation, making for geater enjoyment in reading.

Pushkin is here, of course, and his contemporaries; so are the symbolists, the poets of the Revolutionary transition, including Alexander Blok, who despite his initial enthusiasm for the Revolution said shortly before his death in 1921, "The louse has conquered the whole world, that's already an accomplished fact."

Also represented are such figures in the age of thought control as Ilya Ehrenburg and Boris Pasternak.—L. G.

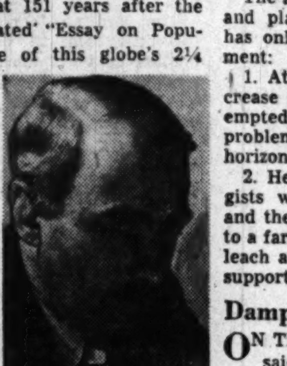
Dr. Malthus Might Not Agree

Chill Solution to Overpopulation

NEW WORLDS EMERGING. By Earl Parker Hanson. Duell, Sloan & Pearce. 385 pp. $3.50.

MY DEAR Thomas Robert Malthus:

It may give you a certain amount of sardonic pleasure to learn that 151 years after the publication of your celebrated "Essay on Population," a small percentage of this globe's 2¼ billion people is beginning to admit the truth of your theory.



EARL HANSON

We are still breeding like rabbits (I am ashamed to report) and still destroying our topsoil and natural resources at an unprecedented rate. The result is almost continuous warfare, the reasons for which we seek everywhere but in the obvious fact that most of the world is hungry and miserable.

We now propose from two antagonistic capitals on our planet not to cut our birth rate or conserve our soil and other resources, but to wipe out tens of millions of our excess citizenry through use of the "atomic" bomb—a device for wholesale, indiscriminate population control which has only recently been perfected.

Last year two neo-Malthusians, Fairfield Osborn and William Vogt, startled the literate minority with a pair of excellent surveys, "Our Plundered Planet" and "The Road to Survival," which so vividly justify your theory that several tens of thousands of people have actually read the books. Additional hundreds of millions are beginning to learn through empty stomachs the lesson you were never able to drive into their empty heads.

But already the reaction with which you were so familiar during your lifetime has set in. Optimists with departmentalized knowledge are once more roaring that you were wrong; that population does not tend to increase faster than subsistence, and that in any case some series of scientific miracles will let us go on multiplying indefinitely.

Influenced by Stefansson

AMONG THESE anti-Malthusians is one Earl Parker Hanson, who has written a readable but partially extraneous book called "New Worlds Emerging."

Mr. Hanson, influenced strongly by an Arctic explorer by the name of Vilhjalmur Stefansson, sneers at the idea that we may soon be unable to feed ourselves. His novel suggestion is that the polar and equatorial regions can supply the food we now grow mainly in the temperate zones.

Using Liberia, the Amazon Basin, Siberia, Iceland and particularly Alaska as examples, he argues that large areas are now lying idle that could support our excess population. He states, for instance, that in Alaska the United States has an equally habitable area larger than Finland and Sweden put together which is now peopled by so few citizens that they could all be assembled in a sports amphitheater which we call the Rose Bowl.

The author, who has been an explorer, technician and planner in most of the lands he describes, has only two flaws—but fatal flaws—in his argument:

1. At our present insane rate of population increase the territories he describes could be preempted in a matter of generations and the whole problem renewed with no additional outlets on the horizon.

2. He blandly ignores the findings of the geologists who insist that the lateritic tropical soils and the Arctic podsoils are almost worthless; that to a far greater degree than other soils, they erode, leach and give up their fertility to the crops they support.

Dampers on Prosperity

ON THE CREDIT SIDE of the ledger it must be said that Mr. Hanson attacks racism, mercantilistic colonialism, absentee ownership and other devices whereby a few white nations have thwarted industry in tropic areas. And he makes the obviously excellent point that without industrial prosperity, Africa, India and China cannot afford the contraceptives which would aid in controlling the rapid increase of miserable millions in many overpopulated nations.

It is true, also, that in giving us a world tour of underpopulated areas Mr. Hanson gives a much more favorable picture of the Amazon Basin than we have usually accepted, tells interesting facts about Iceland's self-financed rise to prosperity, and describes the progress Russia has made in colonizing Siberia. He seems to have some line of communication through what we call the "Iron Curtain" which allows him to state with astonishing certainty that Russia's Arctic citizens are not principally slave laborers.

It will not surprise you to hear that the human race in general has so nearly expropriated and exploited all habitable regions that we must now try to sell shivering humanity the idea of living in icebound wastes where the temperature often drops to 50 below zero. Mr. Hanson, for instance, tries to promote the frozen Arctic Ocean (at least for purposes of communication) as a sort of new Mediterranean. He says the flying weather is excellent and submarines doubtless could cut holes through the 15-foot ice to come up occasionally (like seals) for air.

Mr. Hanson blames the ancient Greeks for our misconceptions of the Arctic and tropic regions (concepts that have certainly been somewhat modified by 2000 years of explorations). But this does not materially strengthen his argument that since Eskimos and Hottentots "prosper" in these lands, Caucasians could be equally happy in such climates.

I beg to remain your humble and unscientific twentieth century correspondent.

STERLING NORTH.

In a Nutshell

I WANTED TO WRITE. By Kenneth Roberts. Doubleday. $3.50.

ROBERTS began writing at Cornell, and graduated to the Boston Post. But newspapering palled, and in 1917 he struck out on his own. He wrote 500 verses, playets, sketches and essays that year, and sold 200 of them. The war took him to the Far East, and gave him a story that put him in solid with the Saturday Evening Post. Then, under the tutelage of Booth Tarkington, he began turning out fine historical novels, as almost everyone knows. This is the autobiography of an indefatigable worker, who donned a motorcycle helmet to shut out the din of telephone bells, lawnmowers, phonographs and other neighborhood noises so he could concentrate on his writing.

SCOTLAND YARD. By Richard Harrison. Ziff-Davis. $2.75.

THE author of this new history of the Yard has worked both sides of the street, for he is an old student of police methods and has written many detective novels. And he says: "Many of the professional detectives of fiction would, in practice, have failed to pass preliminary real life tests." In no other profession, he says, is there a wider discrepancy between fact and fiction. But he concedes that "few readers would care to tackle a thriller that read like an official report, with whole pages of facsimile reproductions from the Criminal Record Office."

FOUNDATIONS FOR WORLD ORDER, by E. L. Woodward and others. University of Denver.

THE seven lectures comprising this book cover the historical and political foundations for world order, the scientific foundations, the moral, the economic and the constitutional foundations, the problem of dependent peoples and, finally, national power and world order. They are treated, respectively, by Earnest L. Woodward, J. Robert Oppenheimer, E. H. Carr, William E. Rappard, Robert M. Hutchins, Francis B. Sayre and Edward M. Earle. The style varies from the folksy tone of the Swiss Rappard through the evangelism of Hutchins to the probing sobriety of Oppenheimer and Earle. But the sum total is an exceptionally constructive challenge to clear thought on the issues of world government. The list of supplemental reading makes this book ideal for the use of discussion groups.

THE WELL OF THE PAST, by Charles Norman. Doubleday. $2.75.

NORMAN'S first novel carries a boy from childhood in a parsonage to maturity as a writer in Greenwich Village and Paris. But the polished prose of the author's biographies is rather lost on fiction; the result is self-conscious and mannered. It gives the effect of writing with the little finger too daintily in the air.

WEBSTER'S NEW COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY. Merriam. $6.

ATHODYD, gammexane, hypertonic and trifocal are among the hundreds of new words in this edition. There are illustrations of such various terms as bazooka and snood. The biographical section of more than 5000 entries has been expanded and reedited, and there is a list of more than 1000 colleges and universities. The new list of abbreviations includes Federal agencies, labor organizations, United Nations committees and war terms. And the volume weighs only a little more than 3 pounds.

MY HEART SHALL NOT FEAR. By Josephine Lawrence. Whittlesey. $2.75.

IN ONE day, in this novel of family life, a young mother learns to put away the doubts and fears instilled from infancy by her own mother. Her husband, aunts, uncles, cousins and in-laws teach her the comforting effect of responsibility, and the solace of a love that may not be able to buy her mink. Miss Lawrence weaves her story tightly, and it's a pleasure to learn that big city life isn't all cocktails and sex.

HOW SECURE THESE RIGHTS? By Ruth G. Weintraub. Doubleday. $2.

MUCH patient labor has gone into the compiling of this book; many facts and statistics have been marshaled in order to present as complete a picture as possible of anti-Semitism as it exists in America today. The book represents, according to its foreword, "a cooperative effort of all the resources of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith." Dr. Weintraub undertook to interpret in this book the data incorporated in the annual survey of the A. D. L.'s civil rights committee, and she has fulfilled the task admirably. Quietly and scientifically presented, it is moving because of its author's determination to avoid appeal purely on the spectacular plane. Confined within this framework of fact and figure, one is left wholly in admiration of the work done by the A. D. L. and wholly in revulsion against discriminatory practices.

A Sprightly Handbook for Single Girl

HOW TO BE HAPPY WHILE SINGLE, by Jean Van Evera. Lippincott. 181 pp. $2.50.

HOW to recover from a lost love, how to say no to an over-eager one; how to choose a roommate—these and many other personal questions are taken up categorially and disposed of brightly in this book. But it doesn't follow that Miss Van Evera is more experienced or more ingenious than her sisters.

This effort is the result of patient, systematic research and the application of common sense. It doesn't offer new answers, or consistently undebatable ones.

She covers living problems in detail. Finding a place to live comes first, followed by things to consider in choosing a roommate to share it. A chapter each is devoted to relations with married friends and their children, how to go places alone, ideas for entertaining in the average girl's circumstances, when and how much to drink. There are suggestions for reading, hobbies, studying and traveling. She finishes with how to grow up and get married happily.

The over-sprightliness and incongruous metaphors are probably excusable in a text so full of information.

HAD an uncle once! Took a passionate interest in propagating ferrets, guinea pigs, goldfish, canaries, bees, several rare varieties of sheep and goats, cows, pigs and horses and deodorized skunks! Ran through a fairly big inheritance, including a large and fertile Midwestern farm. Worried his wife to death. Quite a character!

ROUECHE

No, he isn't among the quaint and fascinating citizens to be found in this American garland lovingly plaited by Berton Roueche. But he might have been. He was the sort of dedicated nonconformist commemorated in this volume.

Mr. Roueche, as readers of the New Yorker already realize, is an "extravagantly gifted author." He has a dramatist's eye for characterization, a collector's mania for charming eccentrics, a folklorist's ear for folksay, plus an avid interest in curious businesses and professions.

Envious Author

SUPERFICIALLY, one might describe this book as 11 characters in search of a profitable hobby. It deals with contented escapists who raise mink, ducks, Sardinian donkeys, oxen, potatoes, maple sirup and herbs; make cigars, ferment excellent wine; join the Shakers or the American Episcopal Order of the Poor Brethren of St. Francis.

All, according to the author, have found the proverbial greener grass on the other side of the river. And Mr. Roueche, who lives out on Long Island and hates New York City, frankly envies them their peace of mind.

But what might have been just another series of sketches on men and their hobbies becomes instead an unforgettable gallery of genre portraits, more effective in many instances than full-length biographies.

Honest Reporter

YOU WILL not quickly forget Mr. Nichols, the septuagenarian upstate New Yorker, who lives for his sugar bush; Percy Peck Beardsley, the leading raiser of pure-bred Devon oxen; Robert W. Green, the retired Wall Street broker, who is devoting his retirement to his beloved little Sardinian donkeys.

They come alive with their first gesture or first sentence of dialogue, and they stay alive long after you have reluctantly put the book aside.

Mr. Roueche perhaps fails to make the bloodthirsty, cannibalistic mink seem lovable, Pekin ducks seem intelligent, potato raising seem romantic or joining a monastic order seem sane. He is, after all, an honest reporter as well as an artist.

But he will almost certainly induce in many a salary slave a fatal desire to throw away his commutation ticket and buy a few pairs of chinchillas. Personally, we are thinking of Sardinian donkeys, which, according to this book, are as affectionate as collies, as patient as little angels, as spirited as kittens, as brave as tigers, as tireless as diesel engines and as intelligent as most human beings. Let's see, if each Jennie had one colt every 14 months . . .—S. N.

USAF Author

A Color Line Novel Wells From Heart

ALIEN LAND, by Willard Savoy. Dutton. $3.

THE young hero of this first novel is faced with the searing problem of whether his name shall be Kern Roberts or Kern Adams; as Roberts, in his father's line, he is a Negro, but as Adams, he is the white descendant of an old New England family.

SAVOY

The opening pages are a dramatic introduction, for Kern at 19 is trying to drive his white half to despise his black half; trying to learn to say "Nigger" with the same scorn and disgust which he has heard in other voices.

His father, a lawyer, had fallen in love with the daughter of a liberal judge, liberal enough to submit to his daughter's marriage but wise enough to fear its consequences. But soon after marriage the pull of race proves too strong, and the father decides he must throw in his lot with his own people. He founds a league to battle for their rights, and he withdraws his wife and child from the Adams to the Roberts side of the fence, from the front end of Jim Crow trolley cars to the back, from a comfortable home to tenement or shack.

The murder of the mother, witnessed by the boy, sets father against son, for the boy sees the murderer and identifies him as a Negro, while the father suspects white lawyers, police and court are trying merely to railroad another black to the gallows. From then on Kern is torn between two groups. He is too white for Negroes, too conscious of the heritage of his blood to be at ease among whites. All land is alien land to him, not only the South where he lives with his father's relatives but also the North where he cannot help but fear that he is avoiding his people's fight. He wants merely to be Kern.

This interference of the racial question in a man's search for a happy, untroubled, normal existence is a fine subject for a novel.

The author, a first lieutenant in the United States Air Forces, who is now stationed in Washington, obviously writes it all out of his heart. Too frequently, however, he overwrites, overdecorates a moral which would be most effectively communicated if left bare and stark. This is more often elocutionary than eloquent.—W. G. R.

A Novel for Aficionados

Fine Artistry Wasted on Sadism

By Sterling North

THE BRAVE BULLS. By Tom Lea. Little Brown. 270 pp. $3.

ERNEST HEMINGWAY would make the perfect reviewer for Tom Lea's new novel. He is one of the few American writers who knows or cares enough about bullfighting to do this narrative justice.

Personally, I feel that the ballet of death to which the Spanish-speaking countries are so passionately addicted is only a little above the sport of feeding the Christians to the lions and other barbaric Roman holiday diversions from which this sadistic pastime has evolved.

I cannot imagine enjoying watching a bull disembowel defenseless horses, nor watching the bull in turn be tortured, the divisa ribbons fluttering from his great shoulders, his glistening hide bleeding from the picador's lances.

The Bloodthirsty Multitude

QUITE possibly the cape work is an art for those who can tell the difference between a veronica, a cambiado and a pase natural. Certainly it must take courage and great skill to stand alone before 10,000 pairs of merciless eyes, facing the merciless horns of the pain-maddened animal with only sword and muleta for protection.

It must take infinitely more courage if, through some clumsy movement, some evidence of fear, one should inspire the catcalls, obscenities and tossed pillows of the unspeakable multitude which can only be satisfied by the death of the bull or the death of the matador.

Tom Lea has an eye for all the refinements of this time-honored, ritualized butchery. In this sharply and poetically written saga of Luis Bello, "The Swordsman of Guerreras," he has captured an entire way of life and death in Mexico. We come to know Bello's woman, his family and his friends. We see him at the height of his power and at the moment he first knows complete and utter fear—shorn of his vanity and his hitherto unassailable self-confidence.

A Questionable Analogy

THE jacket of this book insists that this "is the shadowy story of all of us facing the horns; and the sand under foot at the bull ring of Cuenca is the same sand of the beaches at Peleliu and Normandy."

Which is like saying that the courage of the fight arena and the courage of Calvary are identical.

Tom Lea, who is a very gifted artist as well as a brilliant amateur of the novel form, has done unforgettable drawings for his story. And it must also be admitted that the prose is at times the equal of that to be found in Hemingway's "Death in the Afternoon," even if it is never comparable to that in "The Sun Also Rises."

For aficionados, this will seem a great novel. For the rest of us it will seem a waste of artistry strikingly similar to that expended upon the ancient festival of death in the bull ring.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

IF the American press owes a responsibility to its readers, does it also follow that readers owe a responsibility to the press—say in the matter of accuracy?

What brings up the question is that a weekly news magazine recently described Ralph E. Lapp, whose "Must We Hide?" has just been published by Addison-Wesley Press, as walking every morning from his home in Chevy Chase five miles to the office.

Dr. Lapp, who is in charge of nuclear physics for the Office of Naval Research, says that as a matter of fact he did walk to the office when he lived at the Kennedy-Warren, but since moving to Chevy Chase he has been rather effetely leaning on Capital Transit.

Now he is wondering if he should not continue walking, the more so since he is afraid the bus driver may have read the article, recognize him and point an accusing finger. It makes him feel slinky, and he feels, too, he is not doing his duty by the magazine.

As for "Must We Hide?" he says he was moved to write it after finding that there was nothing on atomic defense as it applies to the United States, written for the layman, that was sound and not emotional.

Mission Accomplished

WILLIAM McDougall, jr., on the United Press cable desk here, completes the story of his experiences as a wartime prisoner of the Japanese in "By Eastern Windows," just published by Scribner's.

McDougall began the story in "Six Bells Off Java."

He was assistant United Press bureau chief at Shanghai when the city fell to the Japanese at the beginning of World War II. He was smuggled out by guerillas, escaped to the Dutch East Indies, and when the Japanese followed he left aboard a ship that was sunk by divebombers. After a half day of swimming with the aid of a lifebelt, he was picked up by a lifeboat from the lost ship, landed in Sumatra seven days later and was captured there shortly thereafter.

In "By Eastern Windows" he brings the story up to his rescue by paratroopers at the war's end.

Despite the hardships—including an attack of the deadly cerebral malaria, of which he was the sole survivor of those stricken in his camp—he says he does not hold any resentment against the Japanese people. He does not believe they were responsible for what their soldiers did.

Ever since I read that Senator Wayne Morse had said, apropos of proposals to raise the postal rate on books, that it cost less, ounce for ounce, to mail chewing gum than books, I have been wondering if there should not be an amendment tacked onto the bills, S. 1103 and H.R. 2945. The amendment would provide an appropriation to see whether Thomas Jefferson, that firm believer in the importance of books, had turned over in his grave.

B-Mused

IN MARGHANITA LASKI'S satirical novel of a Tory utopia, "Toasted English"—a book, incidentally, that cost me a number of unregretted hours of sleep—the population is divided by law into classes, and to Diggory Venn of Houghton, Mifflin I am indebted for a "B" disk, entitling me to all the privileges of B (middle class) people.

The B disk set me to thinking. But for an act of fate (or Diggory Venn) I might have received a C disk, worn by family retainers, or maybe even the lowest in this utopian social scale, an E disk, worn by tramps, casuals and such intellectuals as the bobbies may pick up.

It is barely possible, of course, that I might have had an A disk, had fate (or Diggory Venn) been so minded, and been entitled to my demitasse with my fellow members of the upper class in Mayfair, but the mathematical odds of births would be against it.

Still, all in all, my feelings are hurt. Due to long self-identification with heroes who are always at least barons in Hollywood costume films or aristocratic cavaliers in the Old South myth, I am not used to being B class.

I am never the man who hands George Washington his stirrup cup. I am George Washington, sir.

Brave Sports Writer Picks 'Best' Teams

BASEBALL'S GREATEST TEAMS, by Tom Meany. Barnes. $3.

THIS volume by one of today's best sports writers will cause a lot of arguments. But whether the reader agrees or disagrees with Meany's choices, he will like the workmanlike, readable style.

Hardly anyone will argue with the choice of the 1924 champion Senators as Washington's best team. Some, however, will doubt that the 1920 Cleveland Indians were better than the 1948 team, or that the 1922 Browns were better than the pennant winners of 1944.

His other choices: Yankees, 1927; Giants, 1921; Phillies, 1915; Braves, 1914; White Sox, 1917; Pirates, 1909; Cardinals, 1942; Tigers, 1909; Reds, 1919; Cubs, 1908; Dodgers, 1941; Athletics, 1929, and Red Sox, 1915.

A lot of half-forgotten baseball history is in these pages. Everyone remembers that the Senators won the World Series in 1924 when a ball hit a pebble and bounded over Freddy Lindstrom's head in the twelfth inning. But how many remember that the Senators tied it in the eighth on an almost identical play?

And how many remember the names of the infamous Chicago Black Sox?

Anyone who enjoys baseball will enjoy this book.

Library of Congress Reports Record Use of Its Services

MORE persons used the facilities of the Library of Congress last year than in any other year of its history, Librarian Luther H. Evans reported yesterday. The record was set despite reduced personnel and a decrease of nearly 10 per cent in the number of hours when reading rooms were open to the public.

In requests for photoduplication service alone, the library registered a 503 per cent increase in the 1948 fiscal year, Dr. Evans said.

The library's collections grew by more than 1,300,000 pieces, bringing the total to an estimated 24,400,061 items last June 30.

Dr. Evans pointed to the opening of the Robert Todd Lincoln collection of the papers of Abraham Lincoln as one of the highlights of the year. Other events were the establishment of the Bollingen Prize in poetry, the library's sponsorship of essays about American life, the development and travels of the Freedom Train and the substantial completion of the Cooperative Acquisitions Project.

More than two million pieces of material of all categories were circulated inside the library buildings. In addition, more than 171,000 reference and loan requests were received by telephone.

The number of visitors to both buildings during the fiscal year was above the million mark for the first time since fiscal 1941, Dr. Evans said.

Ike's Faith Defended by D. C. Cleric

RELIGION, based upon the brotherhood of man and unencumbered by traditional creedal beliefs, is the real basis of democracy, A. Powell Davies maintains in this timely book.

DR. DAVIES

The slim volume is based on a recent series of sermons by Dr. Davies, who is minister of All Souls' Church (Unitarian), 16th and Harvard sts. nw. Followers of orthodox religion may not like the evidence, but they will find it difficult to disprove it.

In a foreword, Dr. Davies refers to the controversy which arose after General Eisenhower said he was "an intensely religious man" but did not adhere to any sect. "A democracy cannot exist without a religious base. I believe in democracy," the general said.

A Catholic University professor called this "a shocking statement."

Mr. Davies says that Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and many others who helped shape the Nation believed intensely in the brotherhood of man but rejected, wholly or in part, the dogmas of orthodox sectarian faith. For their religious free thinking they were branded atheists, agnostics and heretics, he points out.

"Democracy . . . is the social and political expression of the religious principle that all men are brothers and mankind a family; at this highest level, the spiritual unity of the human family is declared to be unrestricted by nation, race or creed," Dr. Davies declares.

No lesser faith than this can possibly unite the world or maintain the unity of the American people, he says, adding that "the world will never unite behind a Christian creed, or any other creed."—MARTHA HALL.

Ghosts of Black Hills Ride Again for Casey

THE BLACK HILLS AND THEIR INCREDIBLE CHARACTERS. By Robert J. Casey. Bobbs-Merrill. 383 pp. $5.

TRUTH and legend become strongly blended in the mists of Deadwood Gulch. As time goes on, Robert J. Casey will doubtless find his way into the folklore of the Black Hills of South Dakota, and old timers in their cups may even swear that Bob was present at the Custer Massacre on the Little Big Horn, at the Gold Rush in '74, at the murder of Wild Bill Hickok and at the last big party for Calamity Jane. Those of us who know better will have to testify that he merely wrote the best book on the region, thus immortalizing a galaxy of local heroes.

CASEY

Casey, who is himself a mythological figure of two world wars and 40 years of big-time journalism, is also an actual character. In fact, some 12 years ago I saw Potato Creek Johnny, Deadwood Dick and Robert J. Casey in one room at the same time, and each, with the exception of Deadwood Richard, was the original personality he pretended to represent.

Richard, as Casey explains in this book, was a solid citizen of Deadwood who was asked to play the part of Deadwood Dick in one of the many historical pageants common to the region and became convinced he was the actual character (who in reality never existed except in dime novels).

But out in the last hunting grounds of the Dakotahs, where time stands still and the Homestake Mine is still paying golden dividends, a great many citizens have confused their era and identity. For, as Casey so entertainingly observes, these hills are haunted, not only by the great stone faces of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Teddy Roosevelt carved by bellicose little Gutzon Borglum on Mount Rushmore, but by the clattering hooves of the Tom Price gang and other dastardly road agents; by Scotty Philip, who tried to outdo the hanging gardens of Babylon; by Wavoka, the ghost dancer, and Sitting Bull, the slain; by prospectors who sold their fabulous claims for a song; quick trigger artists now lying beneath the rocky soil of Boot Hill.

The South Dakota Guide Book, as you may or may not know, is the only one of the 48 which is virtually unobtainable, selling for a surprisingly stiff sum in the rare book markets. Bob Casey's book, far more entertaining than the State Guide, will therefore fill a much-needed place in every travel library. Like all of Casey's books, it is consistently readable and packed with good anecdotes.—S. N.

23 Experts Speak

Aging U. S. Population A New Health Concern

By J. A. Crabtree, M.D.

PUBLIC HEALTH IN THE WORLD TODAY, edited by James Stevens Simmons. Harvard. 232 pp., $5.

DURING 1947-1948, the Harvard University School of Public Health conducted a series of public health forums consisting of special lectures delivered by distinguished guest speakers expert in various aspects of community, national, and world health. This book comprises the 23 lectures in the series.

Each of the contributors focuses on some major aspect of public health. The subject matter ranges from the new public health problems of the atomic age to the public health responsibilities of the practicing physician; from child health to the special health problems of old age.

In several of the chapters, notably those written by Prof. C. E. A. Winslow, professor emeritus of public health, Yale University, titled "Evolution of Public Health and Its Objectives," and by Dr. Louis I. Dublin, second vice president, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., titled, "Public Health and the Diseases of Old Age," the public health problems of the future are emphasized.

With infectious diseases, particularly the diseases of childhood, having been brought largely under control, life expectancy in the United States has increased from about 49 years in 1900 to 66 at present. As a consequence of this spectacular saving of life among our youth, together with the reduction in immigration and the gradual decline in the Nation's birth rate, ours is an aging population. In 1900, for example, less than one fifth of the population was 45 or older; in 1940 the ratio had reached slightly more than one fourth; by 1960 a third of our people will be in this older age group. Accordingly, efforts to improve further the public health must be centered increasingly on the problems peculiar to old age, such as cancer, heart disease, diabetes, mental illness and accidents.

On the other hand, the reader is reminded in other chapters of the glaring weaknesses in our basic health structure and the vast progress that is still to be made before we in the United States can afford to be complacent in respect even to such elementary items as a sanitary environment, healthful housing, basic public health organization and adequate medical care.

When the health picture is considered from the world point of view, pestilence, poor nutrition, and epidemic diseases are still in the forefront of importance. However, the opportunities for international cooperation in the field of health are pointed up repeatedly in several chapters and the "internationalist" will find encouragement and hope in the expressed point of view that world health programs may well serve as a rallying point of unity in this troubled world.

The field of world health is far too comprehensive to be covered entirely by a volume of this character. However, the 23 chapters were obviously selected with care, each dealing authoritatively with a problem of great current interest.

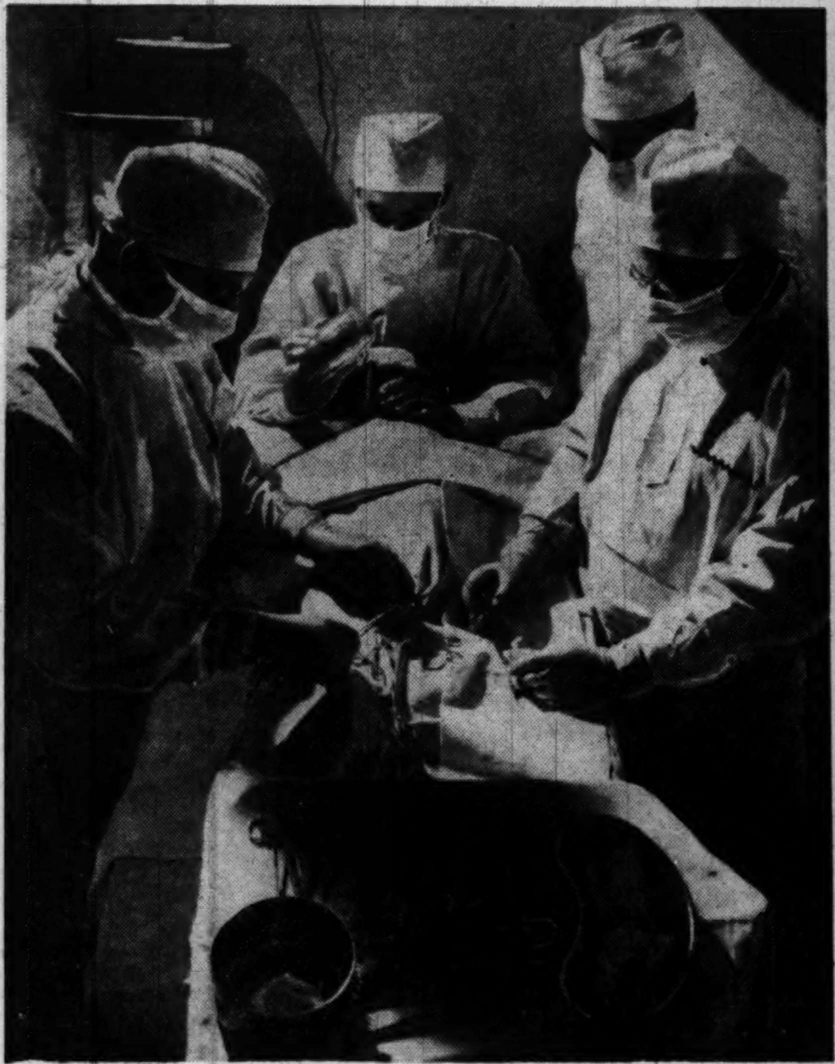
D. C. Doctors' New Strategy Puts Antivivisectionists on Defensive

By James E. Hague
Post Reporter



By Gene Jones—The Washington Post

No operating room for human beings is more gleaming white and antiseptic than the one in the "dog house" at the Georgetown University Medical School. The dog on the table is covered, except for the part actually under the knife. The personnel, left to right: Dr. Charles Morgan, surgeon; Dr. James Heath, anesthetist, holding the dog's head; Lawrence Rosenberg, assistant, and Dr. Theodore Koppanyi, surgeon

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

They've only just met, but it's natural that Margret Beth Belkov of Washington, and Anna of Baltimore, should be chummy. They have a lot in common. Anna, now 7 years old and honorably retired, was one of the 35 dogs on which the Johns Hopkins "blue baby" operation was tried before it was first performed on a human being in November, 1944. Margret Beth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Belkov of 619 16th st. ne., was born six years ago last Tuesday with the "blue baby" condition—a heart malformation which denies the body sufficient oxygen. The operation, an ingenious surgical construction of a blood vessel detour around the stricture, was performed on Margret Beth August 9, 1947, and now you'd never know that her cheeks once had a bluish cast. Anna, meanwhile, has become the pet of the Johns Hopkins experimental laboratory

IT has taken them a long time to learn, but District doctors have finally discovered that offense is the best defense.

Like their colleagues elsewhere, they have fought a running battle for half a century with the antivivisectionists—those who would deny medical teachers and investigators the use of live dogs. Until a few weeks ago, their efforts were limited to defeating bills which would have wiped out what they term an already inadequate supply of dogs.

A new bill, introduced on both sides of the Capitol and due for a public hearing soon before the District Commissioners, puts the antivivisectionsts, instead of the doctors, on the defensive.

This bill would permit certain licensed institutions (medical, dental, veterinary schools, etc.) to obtain a small percentage of the thousands of unwanted stray dogs now put to death annually by Poundmaster Frank B. Marks.

Helps Other Dogs, Too

THE battle has been fought for half a century along fairly constant lines.

The doctors say that animal experimentation is necessary and just, because it makes possible:

1. Advancement of science through the discovery of new techniques, new drugs, etc., to the benefit of human beings and dogs.

2. Tests to assure that manufactured drugs are safe for human use.

3. Teaching of living processes and surgical techniques.

The antivivisectionists retort that dog experimentation is:

1. Cruel.

2. Unnecessary, because nothing has been learned from the dogs that could not have been learned by work on other animals or by clinical observation.

3. Immoral, because the moral fiber of those who experiment on dogs is weakened.

Since 1896, there has been a biennial flurry over bills to curb animal experiments in the District. Representative William Lemke, North Dakota Republican, being the godfather of the legislation in recent years. Since 1896, the local medical profession has wheeled whole galaxies of talent to Congress in an always-successful defense.

JAMES E. HAGUE, who wrote the accompanying article on the anti-vivisection controversy, is a newspaperman who has spent a great deal of time in medical reporting.

For 26 months before coming to The Washington Post as assistant city editor, Hague was director of public relations at Johns Hopkins University Hospital in Baltimore. Previously, he was with the Associated Press in Baltimore specializing in medical features. The success of the famous "blue baby" operation at Hopkins was first reported from Baltimore in Hague's dispatches.

His five years with the Associated Press was interrupted by wartime service in the Marine Corps as a combat correspondent. He came to The Washington Post in February.

Through the years there have been few changes in the bills. Those that did occur are interesting.

Dog Tests Required

ORIGINALLY, the bills would have prohibited both experiments and operations on dogs in the District. But in 1930, the late Dr. William H. (Popsy) Welch of Johns Hopkins pointed out incisively that the bill was at loggerheads with the United States Pharmacopoeia, the druggists' law book. It requires that the purity of certain drugs, pituitary extracts for one, must, under law, be tested on dogs.

The bill was quickly altered to forbid only operations.

In 1946 another change was made. The flat prohibition against dog operations would have made illegal the castration of female dogs for convenience sake and the docking of dogs' ears and tails for show. The bill was revised to permit these operations.

Session after session, the District doctors won victory on the Hill, and only once did the bill get even halfway to passage. This record, the doctors boasted, was made without any real organization, without any paid executive secretaries and without press support approaching the crusade of Hearst and, later, of the late Mrs. Eleanor Patterson in behalf of the antivivisectionists.

Until about a year ago, when a dwindling supply of dogs indicated that perhaps their victory was Pyrrhic, they were content with this occasional annoying excursion from their labs.

Same Charge Bounces Back

ALTHOUGH the doctors' change of strategy will reverse the order of testimony at hearings on the new bill, it is unlikely to change the arguments. The pros and cons have been spelled out in detail over the years, repetitive detail, discursive detail.

The antivivisectionists always charge that dogs are treated cruelly in the labs. They go further and charge that the animal experimenters do not hesitate to use human beings cruelly.

Mrs. Violet Heming Clark, a local antivivisectionist, and wife of Judge Bennett Champ Clark, charged recently that one of these experimenters "beat a little child to death and gouged out its eyes alive." This same charge has been made for years, and denied for years.

In 1930, the antivivisectionists put into the record an account of experiments in which dogs were subjected to unusual heat. It was a Navy experiment to give some idea of the heat tolerance of men working in the bowels of ships. The Navy rebuttal was that the experimental temperatures were far below actual temperatures for the sailors below decks.

Arithmetical Prognosis

THE medical testimony produced by the antivivisectionists in the 1930 hearing was fairly typical.

Dr. John B. Fraser of Toronto objected to the germ theory. He complained that doctors could not say that if a group of persons were to contract pneumonia, that you or you would survive. He could do it, he continued, simply by measuring lung expansion.

The man with 20 cubic inches of lung expansion had only 60 per cent of the pneumonia survival chance of the man with 30 cubic inches of inhalation room. Simple matter of arithmetic, he said.

Dr. Fraser and Dr. William H. Hay, then of Buffalo, argued in concert against the use of serum against disease (tetanus antitoxin, diphtheria antitoxin, antirabies serum are examples). Dr. Hay added that we "have absolutely no evidence that toxin antitoxin prevents diphtheria, yet it is used."

Session after session the antivivisectionists put into the record statements that smallpox vaccination increased smallpox deaths; that the District diabetes death rate has gone up since Banting's discovery of insulin; that Pasteur's epochal discovery, in dogs, of a method of treating rabies in human beings and dogs, was "unsound reasoning." All these discoveries, of course, stemmed from animal experimentation.

One antivivisectionist posed a rhetorical question to himself at the 1946 hearing:

"'We could not teach medicine without animal experimentation. What could you say about that?'

"I would say, 'Then don't teach medicine. Throw it out of your curriculum.'"

Laws Already on Books

THROUGHOUT the years, local medical leaders have answered these charges.

1. Cruelty.

In the first place, they say, relatively few experimental dogs undergo surgery. Those operated on are invariably under anesthesia. Operations without anesthesia would indeed be cruel, they admit, and then they would be liable under the statutes forbidding cruelty to animals.

Secondly, such brutal experiments would be scientifically useless.

The laboratory heads invite inspections, announced or unannounced, and point to the standard rules governing animal experiments. The rules at the National Institute of Health in Bethesda are typical. They state, in part:

"Dogs and cats brought to this laboratory and purchased here shall be held at least as long as at the pound, and shall be returned to their owners if claimed and identified.

"Animals in the laboratory shall receive every consideration for their bodily comfort.

"In any operation likely to cause greater discomfort than that attending anesthetization, the animal shall first be rendered incapable of perceiving pain and shall be maintained in that condition until the operation is ended.

"Exceptions to this rule will be made by the director alone and then only when anesthesia would defeat the object of the experiment. (In such cases anesthesia is to be used as long as possible.)

"At the conclusion of the experiment the animal shall be killed painlessly. (Exceptions are permitted only when necessary to determine the result of the experiment and in such cases the dogs must receive similar care as during convalescence for human beings)."

'Blue Baby' Surgery

2. Dog experiments are unnecessary.

It is on this count that the doctors get most irate. They argue the point in two principal ways: benefits to human beings and benefits to dogs.

Because of diphtheria antitoxin, the anguishing death struggles of a suffocating child become rarer and rarer. Smallpox has almost disappeared from the land. Because of Banting, dogs and insulin, diabetics can live normal and useful lives.

Medicine has wiped out the scourges of infancy and added a score of years to man's life expectancy. This came from animals, including dogs, not from thin air—argue the medical scientists.

Recently, their arsenal has been strengthened by amazing advances in heart surgery. Most famous of all, perhaps, is the "blue baby" operation devised in Baltimore by Dr. Alfred Blalock and Dr. Helen B. Taussig, of Hopkins.

Dr. Blalock told the District Committee in 1946 that this operation had brought life and strength to children doomed to early death. Two area children who had benefited from the operation were taken to the Hill.

Dr. Blalock proudly admitted his use of dogs prior to his first operation and told the committee that in this instance it was a case of these children (now numbering in the thousands) or a few dogs.

The doctors produced testimony from every top medical source that diabetes could not have been controlled without dog work; that the deadly hookworm of the dog (not so lethal in man) was beaten by experiments in dogs with carbon tetrachloride; that the dog suffering from "black tongue" benefited as much from Dr. Goldberger's epochal work as did pellagrous human beings.

G. U. Priest Quoted

3. It is immoral.

First proclaiming that most doctors are pet-lovers, they quote Philosopher John Dewey:

"Stated positively, the moral principles relating to animal experimentation would read as follows:

"Scientific men are under definite obligation to experiment upon animals so far as that is the alternative to random and possible harmful experimentation upon human beings, and so far as such experimentation is a means of saving human life and of increasing human vigor and efficiency."

Rev. David McCauley, S. J., former dean at Georgetown, asked:

"What is the purpose of the medical investigator in experimenting upon animals? The ultimate objective is to obtain knowledge which will alleviate if not eradicate human and animal suffering and disease. Can a man who is striving to attain such an objective be charged with violation of an obligation toward God or himself or his fellowman?"

The doctors answered such half-truths as that London surgeons perfected a "blue baby" operation without dogs. Actually, Dr. Blalock went to London to teach the surgeons, so that their skill is traceable to the dogs in Baltimore.

Shortage of Dogs

SO THE doctors won their legislative battles, but it became more difficult and expensive to obtain dogs, and experiments were slowed.

For example, Dr. Samuel Corson of Howard announced last week a promising treatment of edema (dropsy). He added that the work had been delayed by a lack of dogs, the only suitable animal. Incidentally, the treatment should decrease dog mortality.

In 1948, the District doctors formed a committee to get off the defensive and start throwing punches. In the words of the committee, the medical scientists had for 50 years "nourished the cause of antivivisectionism" by a timid secrecy concerning animal work, by failure to take their problem to the public, by answering the "fantasties of the antivivisectionists in dead earnest."

The new bill is, obviously, the major item in the scientists' offensive. Their arguments for it fall into three major categories.

The bill would replace a law which gives Poundmaster Marks, an avowed dog lover but no veterinarian, absolute authority over disposition of dogs.

Second, the doctors would use only about 10 per cent of the approximately 6000 dogs killed annually at the pound. The bill provides greater safeguards for pet owners than the present law, they say, and there is a licensing provision which could cut off laboratories guilty of inhumane treatment, unsanitary conditions, etc.

Third, they say, the hopes of the Washington area to become a great medical center are fixed, to a considerable degree, on the availability of dogs. "We are teaching by waving our hands in the air because we have no dogs or money," says one. "The supply is utterly inadequate for proper work," says Fr. Paul A. McNally, S. J., dean of the Georgetown Medical School.

Dr. Norman H. Topping of the National Institute of Health dwells on Washington's possibilities of attaining world medical stature—three medical schools, service medical centers, health institute, the famed Surgeon General's library. These make for a breathtaking future, he says, if Washington can attract and hold medical teachers and investigators of the first rank. If there is not an adequate supply of experimental animals, the answer will be no, he says.

Atom Scientists Reduced to Thin Purse, 1-Girl Staff

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

THE Federation of American (Atomic) Scientists was established three years ago to make people conscious of the weapon and what it can do. If the present size of the federation's office staff is any weathervane, Americans are not exactly wearing their brains out over the bomb.

The staff is now down to a grand total of one. She is 24-year-old Dorothy Higinbotham, who studied the harp and art at Oberlin College but has given up both to try to make people remember what happened at Hiroshima and can happen again.

She is a sort of one-woman-against-the-Bomb with a lot of big name scientists ranged like ghosts behind her.

Sometimes, she admits, it's heartbreaking work. But "I don't discourage easily."

For an outfit which boasts such members as Einstein, Oppenheimer and others who discovered the basic source of all energy, the FAS headquarters at 1749 L st. nw. is the last word in modesty: a narrow, two-story building which looks as if one old-fashioned 90-millimeter shell would flatten it. The federation, trying to make both ends meet, has rented out parts of it to a cigarstand, a music shop and to a grocery for storage.

The federation's own rooms, reached by a dark stairway, stand in crying need not only of such trifles as wallpaint but of elemental plaster to keep the rain out.

Wistful Decorations

Day after day Dorothy works on the federation's Newsletter, makes out reports, mails such pamphlets as "There Is No Defense Against Atom Bombs" and "How To Live With the Atom"—and answers letters.

These have ranged in source from schoolchildren ("Tell me all about atomic energy") to that man in Denmark who informs the federation how many bombs there are and how much they weigh.

Dorothy is the youngest of six children of a small-town Presbyterian minister in upstate New York. One brother was shot down over Belgium, another was killed in the Battle of the Bulge. A third is W. A. Higinbotham, one of the Nation's top physicists, who worked on the bomb and is now cochairman of the electronics department at Brookhaven National Laboratory, research center for peacetime uses of atomic energy.

He was FAS executive secretary and Dorothy was fresh out of Oberlin when "Willie" changed the course of her life by writing: "We can use you if you learn to type."

She did, at summer business school, and came to work here in the fall of 1946.

A Victim of Apathy

THERE were six full-time workers in the office then. Also, there was the Committee on Atomic Information, with 18 enthusiastic workers. The committee is gone, dead in the face of public apathy, and the federation itself is as poor as a Southern sharecropper.

"As one of them put it," Dorothy says, "the messianic period of atomic scientists has passed."

But the federation stays doggedly busy, getting out a report on biological warfare—which it believes could destroy civilization; helping scientists who have loyalty problems; polling members as to whether the number of bombs in existence should be made public.

There are fewer letters these days, but still the federation has quite a file. Level-headed ones—and the other kind.

A Fractious Bull

SOME people hate scientists—think they got mankind into its present hell-of-a-fix—and write and say so. But a kindlier soul tells the federation: "You have the atomic energy bull by the tail."

Dorothy Higinbotham knows that no one, now less than ever, has the atomic energy bull by the tail. The federation's original goal of international control is more distant than it was three years ago. Even for the federation, it is "getting harder to know what route to take."

But about that Dane who has those figures: He says he knows for a fact that there are between 800 and 1000 bombs in existence, weight 5 kilograms (11 pounds) each.

Across his letter has been scribbled: "This guy is a crackpot and it's a waste of time to write him."

One letter, in any case, that Dorothy Higinbotham will not be answering.

Giant Fan Says He—and Not Durocher—Kicked Boysen

Long-Time New York Rooter Insists Leo Threw No Punch

NEW YORK, APRIL 30 (U.P.).—Leo (Lippy) Durocher got surprise help in his fight to have his baseball suspension lifted tonight when a long-time Giant fan came forward to say that he—not Leo—"accidentally kicked" Fred Boysen at the Polo Grounds on Thursday.

The fan, 33-year-old George Cronk, said "absolutely" that Durocher did not punch or kick Boysen—a charge that has caused the New York Giants' manager to be suspended from baseball.

Cronk said that he was walking across the centerfield grass in the Polo Grounds on the way to an exit gate immediately after Thursday's game in which the Giants lost to the Brooklyn Dodgers, 15 to 2. He said that Durocher and other Giant players were walking in front of him.

"I remember hearing Boysen heckling Lippy while the crowd was walking across the field. His words weren't distinct, but they sounded as if he was saying to Lippy, 'you're still the bum you were in Brooklyn' or something to that effect.

"Then I saw this fan that I now recognize as Boysen lunge at Durocher," said Cronk. "Apparently he touched Leo because Durocher turned around and bumped the fan with his elbow. Boysen lost his balance and fell down."

"I was right behind Boysen," said Cronk, "and I couldn't help tripping over him because everybody was rushing toward the exit. In tripping, I kicked him, I think in the leg."

"I said 'sorry' and kept walking to the exit because I thought it was just a trivial incident," said Cronk.

The fireman, who works for the New York Central Railroad, said he had told his story today to Edgar Feeley, attorney for the Giants.

When asked if he was willing to go to Cincinnati to attend the hearing on the case before Baseball Commissioner A. B. Chandler, Cronk said, "Sure." He said he and Feeley had discussed such a trip but had not reached a decision.

Asked if he believed Durocher had struck Boysen, Cronk said, "oh, absolutely not."

Cronk said when he first heard of Durocher's trouble, he did not connect it with his own experience "because what happened was so minor." He said he realized "it was the same thing" when he saw Boysen's picture in the newspaper last night.

Cronk, a slim chap who stands six feet, one inch, said he originally lived in Delhi, N. Y., but now stays in New York. He described himself as "a Giant fan since I could walk."

Cronk said he had signed a statement in behalf of Durocher, one of 100 which Giant President Horace Stoneham was gathering to take with him to the hearing in Cincinnati.

Following an hour's conference with the glum Durocher, Stoneham reiterated that the Giants were backing their manager "100 per cent because Leo is in the right."

"I am sure that when the commissioner has all the facts, he will exonerate Leo," the owner of the Giants added. Fans also were rallying to Durocher's support.

Stoneham revealed that he, Durocher and Garry Schumacher, a Giants' front-office man, will leave here by train Monday night for Cincinnati, where Chandler has called Durocher on the carpet for allegedly assaulting an unemployed 22-year-old Brooklyn fan.

'Lip's' Backer Calls Incident 'Accidental', in Statement

Chandler returned to his home at Versailles, Ky., last night from Washington. Asked whether he would call witnesses, he replied, "No comment." That was also his answer to other questions.

Stoneham revealed that he was taking with him for the hearing more than 100 letters and "unofficial affidavits," which have come in from fans who claimed to have witnessed the incident at the Polo Grounds Thursday, when Durocher is accused of hitting and then kicking Fred Boysen.

Most of them agreed with Durocher's version of the incident, although some differed in minor details, according to Stoneham.

"These letters and statements are not from crackpots; they are coming from substantial people," Stoneham said.

Lewis' Two-Run Homer in Ninth Beats Macks, 4-3

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

PHILADELPHIA, April 30.—Joe DiMaggio would like to be saved from his screwball well-wishers with their quaint home remedies for curing his afflicted heel . . . One of the latest of the thousands of letters he has received advises him to: "Apply a heated rock to the heel for three days, bury it under the doorstep for the next three days, and then re-apply it."

Senator Bill McEvoy, who represents TWA in Washington, is fresh from the Kleberg Farm in Texas and reports Assault is ready to return to the races . . . he declares that after it was established Assault could not reproduce in stud, veterinarians virtually succeeded in growing a new hoof on the club-footed little ex-Derby winner.

POVICH

Allie Reynolds has been pitching in the big leagues for nearly 10 years. When the Nats rapped him for three runs in the ninth the other night and tied the score, it was the first time in Reynolds' major league career that he ever blew a ninth-inning lead.

The award of the 1958 Olympic Games to Australia has college track coaches deeply concerned . . . because of the distance to the Olympics, the American tryouts must be held during the school year and the school may not permit their stars to take leave of their studies.

WHEN THE NEW YORK GIANTS prepare their defense for Leo Durocher in his newest mess before Commissioner Chandler, they will introduce a recording of Russ Hodges' broadcast of what happened as it happened . . . Hodges broadsast, "there's a little rumpus going on in centerfield. Somebody is trying to start a fight with Durocher. There could be trouble. But no, cooler heads prevail."

The New York City assemblyman who represents the Harlem district where Durocher's "victim" lives, is demanding a Harlem boycott of the Giants . . . A Harlem law firm has offered its legal services free to Fred Boysen, who brought the assault charges against Durocher.

The Brooklyn club settled out of court for $6000 the last time Durocher was charged with assaulting a fan, but the Giants are prepared to defend their manager if it comes to trial . . . they are more worried about the outcome of Commissioner Chandler's investigation of the case.

Some are born to at least modest fame, like 6-week-old Dean Charles Wolf, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wolf and grandson of graying Pick Wolf, finest catcher ever developed on the Washington sandlots.

BASEBALL HISTORIANS who for a century have credited Abner Doubleday with originating the great American game in 1839, ought to run to cover following this intelligence from David C. Mearns, assistant librarian of the Library of Congress:

"In examining the manuscript of a journal at Nassau Hall, kept by an eighteenth century undergraduate at Princeton, I have come upon the following entry . . . 'a fine day—play baste ball' in the campus but I am beaten for I miss both catching and striking the ball."

In his new book, "You Can't Win at Gambling," Dr. Ernest Blanche cites 13 interesting reasons why . . . Dr. Blanche, a logistics expert of the Army General Staff, who has spent a lifetime in the analysis of wagering games, declares:

1. Every system of betting breaks down and fails, sooner or later.
2. The mathematical probabilities are always against the bettor.
3. Gambling has always been and will be a crooked business.
4. The odds are against the dice-tosser.
5. The roulette operator is ahead of the game before it starts.
6. Punch boards pay out less than half of what they take in.
7. You have only one chance in 2000 of getting any money back in a chain letter scheme or a pyramid club.

CAUTIOUS EDDIE ARCARO who will ride the Derby favorite, Olympia, at Louisville next Saturday, points out that "the colt has never gone the mile-and-a-quarter Derby distance." . . . But neither have any of the others in the Derby field.

Chicago newspapers are chiding the Cubs and White Sox for napping when Scout Wish Egan of the Detroit Tigers signed the sensational Johnny Groth out of a Chicago high school . . . At the $30,000 bonus they paid Groth, the Tigers aptly have come up with the greatest bargain since the Yankees paid $25,000 for Joe DiMaggio.

All of the Nats' luck has not been bad . . . with Cleveland rained out last Sunday, the Nats will be the first team to make a Sunday appearance in the big Cleveland stadium, at which time they'll take down a heavy check for the visiting club's end of the gate receipts from the capacity crowd of 70,000.

Coaltown Wins Breezing

New York, April 30 (U.P.).—Coaltown, Calumet Farm's bay colt, put on another exhibition of blinding speed and posted an easy seven-length triumph today in the $50,000 added Gallant Fox Handicap at Jamaica.

A crowd of 42,904 sun-drenched fans witnessed the first New York appearance of the season for Coaltown, Calumet's star boarder during Citation's enforced vacation. The capacity mob backed him down to a 1-to-4 choice and never once had to worry about its money.

Taking command near the end of the backstretch, Coaltown poured on his vaunted speed and was being eased up by Jockey Steve Brooks at the finish. I. J. Collins' Vulcan's Forge pulled into second place, two lengths ahead of Mrs. E. L. Hopkins' Three Rings. W. L. Brann's Escadru and the King Ranch pair of Better Self and But Why Not brought up the rear of the field in that order.

Coaltown maintained his unbeaten record for the season as he chalked up his seventh straight. He returned $2.50 and $2.20, with no show betting allowed. Vulcan's Forge paid $2.90.

Reds Whip Bucs, 8-4; Take Lead

Cincinnati, April 30 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds, picked by many of the experts to finish last in the National League pennant race, took over the loop's No. 1 spot today with an 8-4 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Notching their third successive triumph, the Reds shelled six Pirate hurlers for 12 hits, including home runs by Johnny Wyrostek and Grady Hatton. It came with a 4 to 0 victory by Boston over New York to help boost the Reds into first place.

Young Herm Wehmeier, who was taken out early in the sixth inning, was credited with the victory, his first in two outings.

The Reds greeted starter Elmer Riddle with a four-run outburst in the first inning, featured by Wyrostek's two-run homer. He went to the showers when Hatton homered to open the next round.

Wehmeier pitched shutout ball until the fifth when two walks, an error and three hits gave the Pirates three runs. When Monte Basgall singled to open the sixth, Wehmeir gave way to Walker Cress.

The Reds put the game on ice with three markers in the seventh.

Braves Beat Giants Behind Sain, 4-0

Boston, April 30 (AP).—Righthander Johnny Sain came up with his best performance of the season today as he pitched the Boston Braves to a four-hit 4-0 triumph over the New York Giants.

Sain, who won 24 games last year, had no trouble in hanging up his first victory of the season. He walked one and fanned two and breezed along as his mates gave him a three-run working margin in the first inning.

Larry Jansen started for the Giants and wildness plus an error by Sid Gordon helped the Braves to score three runs in the opening frame. It was the second straight defeat for the ace New York pitcher who hasn't won yet this year.

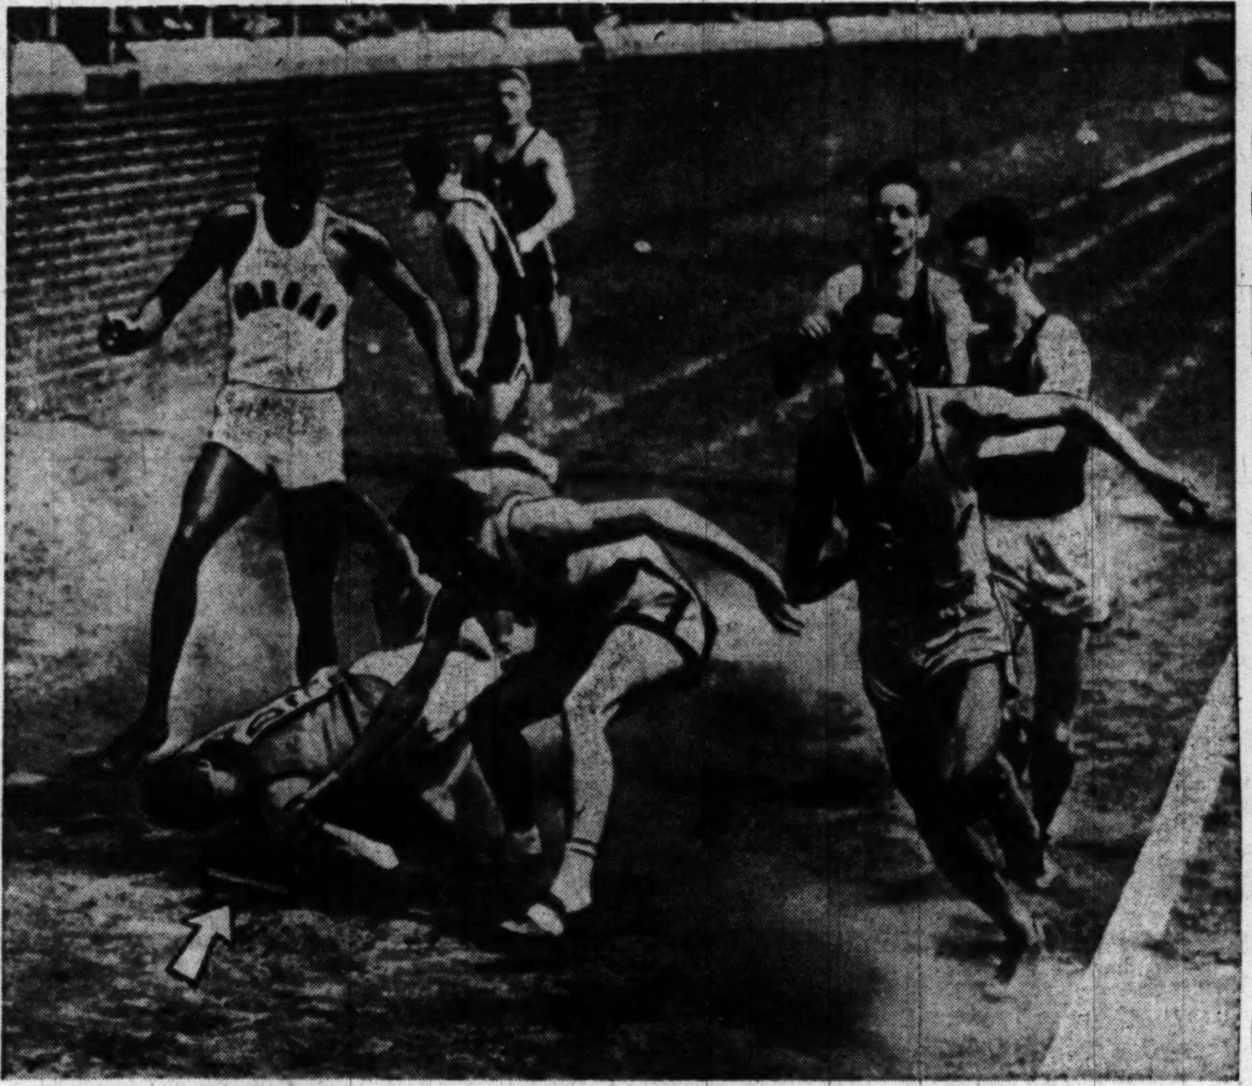
Stanky Says Leo 'Isn't That Low'

Boston, April 30 (U.P.).—Eddie Stanky, Boston Braves second basemen, who has been feuding with Leo Durocher, said today he believes the New York Giants' manager is innocent of assaulting a fan.

"The fellow has his weaknesses, but he isn't that low," said Stanky, who has nursed a grudge against the former Brooklyn manager since the Dodgers sold him to Boston at the start of the 1948 season.



A SPILL IN RELAYS—Wallace Grant, running for Rutgers in the college 1-mile relay championship at the Penn Relays in Philadelphia yesterday, falls headlong as his teammate, unidentified, bends over to pick up the baton which Grant dropped. Another runner, in background, also goes down in the shuffle as other runners swerve to avoid a wholesale pile-up. Rutgers placed fourth in the race despite the fall. (See story Page 3-C)

Yanks Win in 9th, 4-3; Tribe Bows

Henrich Swats Payoff Homer

New York, April 30 (AP).—Tommy Henrich, the "old pro" of the New York Yankees, came through again today, socking a two-run ninth inning homer to give the Bombers a 4-3 triumph over the Boston Red Sox.

Gene Woodling singled to start the ninth before 49,205 fans, largest crowd of the season in Yankee Stadium. Henrich then shot a Tex Hughson pitch into the lower right field stands to break it up. The blow was Henrich's third four-bagger of the season and the second one he has hit in the ninth to win a game.

Frank Shea, who pitched the ninth, received credit for the victory. It was Shea's first appearance of the season.

Lefty Tommy Byrne started for the league-leading Yanks, who now have won ten games, but as usual wildness proved his undoing.

Byrne walked eight Red Sox, including three straight in the seventh inning, before he was removed in favor of Joe Page. Dom DiMaggio greeted Page with a two-run single that tied the score at 2-2.

Righthander Joe Dobson, seeking his first victory, opened for the Red Sox. Dobson was whacked for two runs in the fifth when Bobby Brown walked, Dick Kryhoski tripled and Gerry Coleman singled. Dobson bowed for a pinch-hitter in the seventh and Hughson took the rap.

Nats Buy First Baseman Herman Reich From Tribe

Philadelphia.—The Nats came up today with a new ballplayer, not exactly new. He's a 30-year-old rookie from the Pacific Coast League, name of Herman Charles Reich, who plays both the outfield and first base.

They got him via Cleveland, which claimed Reich from the Portland club on waivers last November but found no place for him on their 1949 roster. The Nats paid the $10,000 waiver price for Reich after spotting him on the Indian's waiver list.

One of Clark Griffith's West Coast operatives turned in a glowing report on Reich and advised that he be grabbed at first chance. He pointed to the big fellow's 19 home runs, 38 doubles .323 average and 100 runs batted in last year in the Coast League.

Reich is a sizable guy, 6 feet 2 and 195 pounds. He is that rrae specimen of ballplayer — a left-handed thrower who hits right handed. For Portland last season, he shuttled between first base and an outfield job, playing the full 187-game schedule.

Manager Joe Kuhel, eager to welcome anybody who promises base hits, today declared he may replace Ed Robinson with Reich against left-handed pitching. He also envisions him as outfield talent.

Reich put in nine consecutive years with Portland before he was "discovered" by the Indians last fall and drafted.

His addition to the Nats presages the release of two players before the May 20 deadline for reduction to the 25-player limit.

Outfielder John Simmons and Catcher Len Okrie are the likeliest to be optioned out.

Meanwhile, Kuhel in his desperation to get some runs, yesterday gave his line-up another shuffle, benching Second Basesince Al Kozar for the first time since that young man joined the club last year. He turned over the second base job to Sherry Robertson.

Boudreau Hurt In 7-5 Defeat

Detroit, April 30 (AP).—Righthander Virgil Trucks ended the Detroit Tigers' three-game losing streak as he pitched them to a 7-5 victory over the Cleveland Indians here today before 50,610 fans.

Trucks, aided by home runs by Vic Wertz and George Vico, outpitched "Satchel" Paige and three other Cleveland pitchers to hang up his third straight win of the season.

Lou Boudreau, the Indians' shortstop and manager, narrowly escaped serious injury in the fifth inning when he was struck by one of Truck's fast balls.

The ball hit him high on the left shoulder and caromed off against the back of his head. Boudreau dropped on his back and players and coaches of both teams rushed to his aid.

He recovered in a couple of minutes, but left the game. An examination in the clubhouse by the Detroit team physician showed Boudreau had a nasty bruise, but the injury was reported not serious.

It was the second time in four days that Boudreau was hit. On Wednesday, he was struck on the left elbow by a pitch thrown by Orval Grove, then with the Chicago White Sox.

Detroit Tiger Leftfielder Dick Wakefield was shaken up when he rolled over while trying to make a shoestring catch of Peck's drive.

Paul Calvert Hurls Way Out of Hole

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Philadelphia, April 30.—As viewed through the thick lenses of Pitcher Paul Calvert, this world today began taking on more pleasant aspects. The Nats gave him some runs to work with finally, not many but a few, and he made them stand up nicely for a 4-3 victory over the Athletics.

The diligent young man from Canada who was wondering, after two previously futile starts, if the Nats were ever going to stir up a run for him, today heard the sweet sound of homers off the bats of Clyde Vollmer and Buddy Lewis.

Vollmer struck the first blow for him, at a time when the A's were leading the Nats, 1-0, in the third inning. It was an immense shot high into the left field seats with Sherry Robertson on base and gave Calvert the novelty of owning a lead.

Lewis' Homer Power-Laden

Lewis swatted his homer in the ninth, and well he did, and it was well also that AlEvans was on base, because Calvert needed all those runs to get by in the ninth. The Lewis wallop was a fierce thing that cleared the right field wall on a line.

All of this time, Calvert had been holding the A's to four hits and coming up to the ninth he had pitched four consecutive hitless innings. His sinker ball was a magnificent thing—only two put outs for the Washington outfielders in the first eight innings, and the A's apparently were a doomed ball club.

And then, in the bottom of the ninth they got tough, to the glee of their 9586 customers. Ferris Fain opened with a single to left. Taft Wright rapped a single to right. Hank Majeski singled to left, and Coan bobbled the ball. The A's had one run over, a man on third, the tying run on first and nobody out.

Calvert Justifies Kuhel's choice

There was furious activity in the Washington bullpen with Dick Welteroth warming up. Manager Joe Kuhel started to jerk Calvert, changed his mind and let him pitch to Sam Chapman, a guy who had previously whacked him for a pair of triples.

Yost grabbed a grounder off Chapman's bat and threw to second for a force play for the first out, as Wright scored. The A's moved in Carl Scheib to hit for Catcher Astroth, and Calvert quickly had him in the hole with two called strikes.

Scheib bounced a grounder to Sherry Robertson at second base and it was all over, with Robertson stepping on the bag and pegging to Robinson for a double play.

Kuhel shook up his lineup in an attempt to inject some more hitting, and it paid off with the Nats whacking Joe Coleman and Charley Harris for 11 hits. The major change was the benching of Al Kozar and the insertion of Outfielder Robertson at second base.

The A's moved a run in front in the second when Chapman tripled off the right field wall. Calvert fanned Astroth for the second out, but the A's came up with a tainted run when Suder got

Navy Varsity Pulls Rank on Frosh Crew

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

HERE'S a case of armed discrimination which Defense Secretary Johnson may want to investigate: Navy made its freshman crew team row upstream, but the varsity and jayvee paddled downstream in a triangular race against Cornell and Yale last week . . . the oversight of the banquet season occurred at Georgetown's "G" Club dinner Wednesday when Jack Hagerty, Hoya athletic director, wasn't even introduced at the affair. Just a short year ago he was one of the principal speakers at the same function . . . it's a good thing that Jimy Cooper is studying upholstery because Danny Petro threatens to knock the stuffings out of him in Monday's Griffith Stadium featherweight tussle . . . Bugs Thompson, former McKinley Tech halfback, is not doing as well academically as he is athletically at Clemson College. He's been ordered to buckle down to his studies if he wants to remain in school.

BET YOU didn't know that a "whoo-hoop" was a foxhunting expression announcing the death of the fox; or that Zulu was an artifical fly; or that battledore was the former name of a badminton racket; or that barley-water was a potation of barley and water deemed beneficial to tennis players? . . . You did? Well, what happens to a football player when he's Indianized and what's a baseball seagull? . . . Answers can be found in Parke Cummings' "Dictionary of Sports," just published and a must for every sports library . . . It contains 9000 sports terms arranged in alphabetical order from "abseil" to "zigzag." Over 400,000 words are used to define, clarify and enlarge the terms . . . In the same vein, Carroll can also boast that the Terp football team helped North Carolina go to the Sugar Bowl by losing to the Tar Heels, 49-20 . . . Cap fan Dewitt O. Burke, 1406 16th st., nw., writes in to object to last Sunday's story about Coach Red Auerbach. "I think Auerbach should be fired, as a good coach would have given us a championship this year and last year," he wrote. "Many of the players on the team feel the same way and have said so," he added . . . Is Mr. Burke forgetting that the Caps won the Eastern title this season . . . Auerbach has another date with officials of the Providence Steamrollers on May 4 in regards to coaching their basketball team. . . .

Pafko Says He Caught Payoff 'Hit'

Chicago, April 30 (AP).—A disputed inside-the-park home run by Glenn Nelson salvaged a 4-to-3 victory for the St. Louis Cardinals over the Chicago Cubs today before 30,775 fans.

Cubs Centerfielder Andy Pafko claimed to have caught Nelson's blow but it was ruled no-catch by Umpire Al Barlick.

Pafko, unwilling to believe the no-catch ruling, did not throw the ball until Nelson was crossing the plate with the winning run.

With the Cardinals trailing 3-1, Enos Slaughter doubled in the ninth and scored on Eddie Kazak's single with two out. Chuck Diering ran for Kazak. Nelson then lined the ball to left center and Pafko made a somersault dive and came up with the ball.

Barlick did not make any decision until Pafko started running toward the infield with the ball.

Bob Rush went the route for his second loss while Ted Wilks, third Cardinal hurler, won his second relief win.

Cary Middlecoff Gives Celebrities Something To Shoot At With Record 69

Cary Middlecoff, Memphis dentist and heir apparent to Ben Hogan's throne as the best of the younger pros, yesterday set a new course record of 69 at the Army and Navy Country Club.

He also set up a target for the National Celebrities tournament field to shoot at June 4-5 when some of the game's greatest players will test the Army-Navy course.

Par for the 18-hole route that Middlecoff played is 73. He toured the second and third nines of the service club's 27-hole layout.

General Omar Bradley, a charter-member starter in the Celebrities, was in the foursome with Middlecoff. Bradley and Middlecoff both sank long putts on the last hole for birdies to gain the applause of a large gallery. Bradley shot 85.

Rounding out the foursome were Maj. Gen. Clark L. Ruffner, 92, and Col. Cary Hutchinson, uncle of Middlecoff, who had 94.

Middlecoff found the greens to his liking and rapped in seven birdies but slipped over par on three holes.

He amazed his companions on the dogleg seventeenth by hitting a tee shot 265 yards, all carry, over high trees to the green for an easy birdie 3.

Middlecoff's card against par:

Par Out	443	545	543—37
Middlecoff	543	445	433—35
Par In	544	345	434—36—73
Mid'coff	444	334	543—34—69

CONGRESSIONAL COUNTRY CLUB'S opening-day tournament prizes yesterday went to A. B. Mills with a 78 for low gross. R. A. Gabriel, 90, 20—70, took low net, and second low net was taken by C. H. Tesky, 83, 12—71. The prize for selected nine holes, half handicap, went to Carlisle Bargeron, 38,11—27. Dr. J. E. Wissler had a 102, 24—78 to win the blind bogey event after a 12-player draw, and the blind bogey for guests was taken by Capt. H. T. Morse, 82, 13—73.

EIGHT MATCHES open the Maryland State Golf Association team match schedule today. Each team consists of eleven club members and the club pro with all members to have an official Maryland State handicap card.

Each foursome scores three points, two individual matches and the best ball. In event of a tie, the No. 1 teams play off the match, sudden death.

Opening matches find Kenwood at Bonnie View; Prince Georges at Congressional; Woodholme at Hillendale; Rolling Road at Naval Academy; Catoctin at Washington; Baltimore at Suburban; Indian Springs at Bethesda, and Manor at the Country Club of Maryland.

Col. Roger Brown, champion of the Army-Navy Country Club, believes in properly preparing for the defense of his honors.

Roger not only has stepped out with a new set of irons, but he is carting around three wedges, the better to get out of trouble. "Of which I am having plenty this spring," he says.

But what Roger really has on his mind is a husky newcomer to the service club, Col. Jim Wilson, who hits the ball a mile and won the title at Maxwell Field, Ala., last year.

Gene Larkin had over thirty juniors out for the first of his instruction class Friday afternoon at Woodmont. The group instructions will last until some time in June, meeting every Friday at 4 p. m.

Joseph Jordan, a big guy with a wonderful personality in the pro shop at Army-Navy, has been there more than twenty years, serving under every professional the club has had.

The Fairfax Country Club, finest public course in this area, is accepting reservations for starting times on holidays and weekends. Play must be in foursomes. Phone Fairfax 265.

Bethesda Country Club expects to open its new nine holes the latter part of this month. The full eighteen-hole course will be a standard par 70, 6300 yards. Harry Griesmer, Bethesda pro, and 1946 Maryland State open champ, says that the course will compare favorably with any other in this area.

Anacostia plays East Potomac in a 20-man team match, the first of three to determine posession of the S. G. Loeffler Cup. This is the first year that the public clubs have had the Loeffler trophy to shoot for.

The Northern Virginia Golf League goes into its second week of play today at Quantico Golf Club. Quantico is in second place in the league behind Washington Golf and Country Club. Washington has 48, Quantico 38½, Army-Navy a very close third with 38, and Belle Haven fourth with 19½.

Chisox Win On Pierce's 6 Hitter, 5-4

St. Louis, April 30 (AP).—Billy Pierce allowed only six hits and struck out eight as the Chicago White Sox nosed out the St. Louis Browns, 5 to 4, today.

But Pierce had to have help from Matt Surkont to stop a late Brownie rally.

With one man safe on an error and another on a hit, Manager Jack Onslow called in Surkont, who threw wild to allow a run in. But Pinch Batter Hank Arft flied deep to center field and Bob Dillinger grounded out to end the game.

The Sox took the lead in the third when Pierce walked, Adams was safe on Dillinger's fumble, and Gordon Goldsberry walked, filling the sacks. Luke Appling flied out for the second out, Pierce scoring after the catch and Grover Bowers doubled for two more tallies.

Around The Town...

THE Boys' YMCA, which just completed its 35th annual learn-to-swim campaign, will begin its spring life-saving course Monday at 7 p.m. at the Boys' YMCA pool. Thereafter the classes in junior and senior life-saving will meet every Monday and Wednesday at 7 until completion of the courses in June. Boys 12 to 17 years can phone registration to Boys' YMCA, NA. 8250, ext. 49. Rick Negus, certified American Red Cross water safety instructor, will conduct the free classes.

The Y announced that 354 boys actually learned to swim in last week's program. Out of nearly 1100 entries received 1018 were assigned to classes, and 840 boys actually attended the daily classes, some only one of two classes, but all advanced somewhat in their ability to handle themselves in the water. The course was so condensed that it was necessary for the boys to attend all classes, as each day something new was taken up and not enough time was allotted to repeat.

Howard, the Southern Conference coach of the year, will show movies of Clemson's 24-23 triumph over Missouri in the Gator Bowl game. The Tigers coach will also tell the alumni what he thinks of the team's chances for another undefeated season this year.

Howard Milers Win, Avert D. C. Shutout at Penn Relays

Coachless Hoyas Lose In Protest

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Franklin Field, Philadelphia, April 30. — Wayne University's Olympian Lorenzo Wright made the strongest individual impression among the estimated 3000 athletes who cavorted in today's closing program of the fifty-fifth annual Penn Relays.

Washington's collegiate standard-bearers hardly made any impression at all, Howard's mile relay team winning in the "college class" event and averting a D. C. shutout.

Wright, who ran a leg on yesterday's winning 440-yard relay team, sparked Wayne to another triumph in the 880 today. He found time to take the broad jump in 23 feet 8¼ inches, and missed a double when he was held to a second in the 100 by Indiana's Charley Peters, who won in 9.7 seconds.

The Howard team—Booker Anderson, Ernest Boswell, William Collins and Lou Russell—won its event handily over Haverford, Swarthmore and Virginia State. The Bisons were clocked in 3:23.1 and that time held up as the fastest until the big boys took over.

Georgetown Protests

Georgetown's IC4-A indoor champions couldn't qualify for the Mile Relay Championship of America and finished a close fourth.

The top relay event was held in two sections. Vin Cino, taking advantage of a terrific jam on the first turn, ran a fine lap to give Georgetown a 3-yard lead in its section.

Mort Kane lost it and finished third by about five yards; Bob Spearman kept the margin about the same but Anchorman Ed Sause, running with a heavily taped led, faded.

Sause did make a valiant effort for the fourth spot and appeared to have a Manhattan runner beaten by a stride. It didn't appear to make much difference—with only the first three qualifying—but then the judges disqualified the Morgan State team that ran in 3:16.2.

The coachless Hoyas, with Hurdler Bill Mitchell acting as spokesman, tried hard to convince the judges of their mistake. But it was like arguing with a baseball ump.

Actually, the Hoyas couldn't have been a threat anyway. New York University, paced by the brilliant Jim Gilhooley and Reggie Pearman, disposed of tougher opponents in the second section to win in 3:16.6, then took the final easily a second faster.

Terps Finish Last

Racing in the same section as Georgetown were Maryland's Bill Alexion, Paul Ostrye, George McGowan and Ed Matthews but the Terps finished last.

The same quartet missed out in the half-mile relay when it took second by inches to Penn State in its heat. The courageous finish wasn't good enough, on a time basis, to qualify for the finals.

Alexion was second in his heat in the special 100-yard invitation but was out of the money in the final. Howard's Joe Payne finished third in his heat and didn't make the windup but Teammate Tanker Marshall nabbed fifth place in the broad jump with a leap of 22 feet 2½ inches.

Georgetown's two-mile relay team of Jim Rams, Dave Smith, Racely Saunders and Pat O'Brien finished far behind the winning Ohio State quartet.

With Pearman out of a race for a change, Whitfield brought the Buckeyes home in 7:44.4 although he had to fight off a determined challenge by Penn's John Strassenburgh.

In the four-mile event, taken easily by Penn State, Maryland's Tyson Creamer, Jim Umbarger, Charley Kehoe and Bob Palmer trailed by a furlong.

Tar Heels Beat Hoyas

Georgetown made a final losing effort in the 480-yard shuttle hurdles. In this one, North Carolina beat the Hoyas in 0:60.1, a new carnival record. The Tar Heels' Bob Morrow, Jack Mody, Bill Albans, and Dick Taylor promptly broke that in the finals, speeding home in 0:59.3.

For Georgetown, Bill Mitchell ran anchor to Bart Cooper, Bob Dowe and Tim Werner.

In the Mason-Dixon Conference mile relay, Catholic University's John Rudd held the lead until the next to last turn when Capt. Larry Brandenburg, sturdy Washington College anchorman, got the boys from Chestertown home first in 3:25.4. CU finished third behind Johns Hopkins.

American U. finished last when the baton was dropped in the exchange by Pete McCutcheon and Henry Schaffer.

Terps Shift Griffith Stadium Grid Games to Own Park

Maryland yesterday shifted the three football games it planned to play in Griffith Stadium this fall to its own Byrd Stadium, which will be enlarged to seat 21,000 spectators.

Transferred from the Nats' ball park to the College Park plant were the South Carolina (October 29), George Washington (November 5) and West Virginia (November 24) games. The latter is a Thanksgiving Day game.

The Terps also switched their Byrd Stadium clash with Georgetown from Saturday, October 1, to Friday night, September 30.

The present Byrd Stadium can accommodate 12,000, but steel bleachers will be placed at each end of the field to increase the seating capacity to 21,000.

The new Terrapin stadium, which will seat 35,000, is under construction and will be ready for use by September, 1950.

Old Liners, Grays Win in Squad Games

The Old Liners and the Grays came off with victories yesterday as the University of Maryland and Georgetown wound up their spring football training seasons with intrasquad games.

At College Park, the Old Liners marked up a 6-0 triumph over the Terrapins as veteran Jimmy La Rue scored the only touchdown before a gathering of about 1000 fans.

LaRue's scoring punch came on the end of a 35-yard series of plays in the third period. He plunged over from the 1-yard line. Bob Dean missed the conversion.

Out at the Hilltop, the Grays turned back the Blues, 1-6, on the strength of a fumble recovered by Guard Dick Imboroni, a sophomore, and carried 60 yards for a touchdown.

Both Gray scores came in the first period, the initial one as Dick Losh took a 10-yard pass from Quarterback Bob Deacon. The Blues threatened in the second and third periods, but couldn't go across until midway of the last quarter, when Jack Juen, sophomore quarterback, capped a 20-yard drive with a 3-yard sneak through the middle of the Gray line.

Petro, Cooper Box for D. C. Title Monday

Which local boy will make good?

Danny Petro and Jimmy Cooper, Washington's top featherweights, clash in a 12-rounder tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium to supply the answer.

The fight marks the opening of the outdoor season and may earn the winner a national rating.

Petro, southpaw slugger, has been a professional for nine years and has amassed an impressive record. Danny has had 46 fights and won 36, all but ten by knockouts. Petro, a member of one of the District's foremost fistic families, is a product of Police Boys Club No. 5 where he held titles in the 50, 60, 70, 80, and 90-pound classes before gaining Golden Gloves championships.

Cooper, only 20, has 14 wins and one draw in 20 professional bouts. Jimmy, however, has never fought a southpaw, although he got his start under Manuel Ortiz, the bantamweight king and one of the cleverest left-handed boxers in ring history.

Ortiz took a liking to Cooper while the youngster was in the Army and Cooper believes the lessons taught him by Ortiz will stand him in good stead tomorrow night.

Both fighters are hard punchers with Petro having the edge. However, Cooper thinks that he is a match for Petro's infighting and hard body blows.

Neither has ever had to go 12 rounds nor does either expect he'll have to.

The first bout starts at 9 p. m. Preliminaries pit two local middleweights, Holly Mims and Scott Richardson in a five-rounder; another five finds Herbie Jones meeting Alfonso Wilkinson. Four-rounders pair Pat Thomas against Jackie O'Keefe, of Providence; Herbie Stowe against Jesse Heagen and Tommy Jones with Tommy Larner.

D. C. Highs Fail to Win At Relays

Franklin Field, Philadelphia, April 30.—The usually potent Washington schoolboy delegation to the Penn Relays failed to take a first-place in this second day of the fifty-fifth annual carnival.

Best performance was a second turned in by a Cardozo High quartet in the mile relays. The team of George Carter, Frazier Edwards, Charlie Robinson and Joe Walker finished 15 yards behind Kearny, N. J.

Cardozo's Joe Walker led briefly on the last lap but couldn't match the 49-second effort of Kearny's anchor man, Oliver Sax. Kearny's time of 3:30.9 made it one of the fastest heats.

Phelps Vocational could do no better than sixth in its 1-mile event with Box Lomax, Tom Mayo, Bob Ridley and Elton Salter. Long Branch, N. J., won the race.

Armstrong, back in the pack all the way, finished tenth in an 11-team field in the mile relay. Ed Carson, Jay Peterson, Burton Bellfield and Lynell Poyner trailed the winning La Salle of New York quartet.

Phelps tried again in the 2-mile relay but wound up fourteenth in the second section of the 68-team event. Running in this one for Phelps were Salter and Ridley again and Ken Hall and Howard Ivey. Brooklyn's Bishop Loughlin was the schoolboy standout, winning both the mile and 2-mile relay championships.

Plebe Golfers Win

Annapolis, Md., April 30 (AP).—Navy plebe golfers won four of six twosomes to defeat George Wshington's freshmen 4 to 2

Christiansen Wins Drake Hurdles Race

Des Moines, April 30 (AP).—Paul Bienz, sturdy Tulane sprinter, and Paige Christiansen, lean Michigan State hurdler, won the blue ribbon open events of the fortieth annual Drake Relays today, both with driving finishes.

Bienz took the 100-yard dash in :09.8 from Jerome Biffle of Denver, and Christiansen won the 120-yard high hurdles in :14.6 from his team-mate, Horace Smith.

Michigan State won two relay races in addition to Christiansen's victory, the 4-mile relay and the shuttle hurdle race.

A lot of glamour was taken out of the two-day meet when Wisconsin withdrew from the 2 and 4 mile relay races preventing Don Gehrmann from trying for a third anchor victory.

This slender, indomitable distance ace brought Wisconsin home in front in the sprint and distance medley relays yesterday with brilliant finishing spurts. No one has ever anchored three victorious teams here. Coach Guy Sundt of Wisconsin decided his men had too much work yesterday.

Except for a fitful breeze, weather conditions were perfect, but the expected large-scale attack on Drake records did not come off.

One of the big upsets of the meet occurred in the 2-mile relay. Kansas, with Harold Tarrant running a stout anchor leg, won by 15 yards over the Oklahoma Aggies in 7:45.8, with California, third, and Nebraska, fourth.

Lack of competition probably saved the record of 17:29.6, held by the Oklahoma Aggies in the 4-mile relay. Michigan State's highly touted quartet of distance runners won with a half-lap margin over California in 17:32.3.

Wasser Improves in Shot

Norm Wasser of Illionis improved his 1948 performance by one eighth of an inch to take the shot put with 52 feet 9⅞ inches, retaining his title. The high jump resulted in a tie at 6 feet 6⅝ inches between Illinois' Dike Eddleman, and R. J. Lennertson, of Washington University.

Oklahoma A. and M. established itself as the best of the sprint relay teams at this carnival by adding the half mile title to its 440-yard crown. Dick Stolpe charged in five yards ahead of Bob Schepers of Michigan State in 1:27.5.

Dick Ault, Missouri's lean Olympic hurdler, caught Bob Hall of the Texas Aggies 25 yards from the tape in the 220-yard low hurdles, winning in :24.1. This mark became a Drake Relay record, since the low hurdles have only been run here once before. That was in 1926 when G. P. Guthrie of Ohio State won in :24.5.

Bolen Beats McKenley In 440-Yard Match

Boulder, Colo., April 30 (AP).—Colorado's Dave Bolen won the latest round in his long track rivalry with Herb McKenley when he nosed out the former Illinois star in a special 440-yard match race today at the Colorado Relays.

The Colorado graduate's time of 46.9 seconds was short of McKenley's world mark of 46.3 but was the fastest quarter mile ever stepped on the University of Colorado track.

The two men—both Olympic runners last year—now have met an even dozen times with McKenley finishing ahead eight times.

Colorado won the team championship with 21 points and Kansas State was second with 10.

Margaret Gunther Wins South Golf

New Orleans, April 30 (AP).—Miss Margaret Gunther, Memphis, Tenn., won the Southern women's golf championship here today.

The Memphis, Tenn., golfer defeated Betty Mackinnen, Mount Pleasant, Tex., in the finals 6 and 5.

Fitzpatrick Leads Terps To 7-3 Win

Joe Fitzpatrick was practically the whole show yesterday as he pitched and batted Maryland to a 7-3 Southern Conference baseball victory over VMI.

Fitzgerald held the visitors scoreless until the eighth when they bunched five of their nine hits to tally all their runs.

At the plate, Fitzpatrick had a perfect two-for-two and drove in four runs. He also stole a base.

Maryland jumped off to a 2-0 lead in the second inning and added two more runs in the fifth, and three in the sixth.

The triumph gave Maryland revenge for a previous licking by VMI. It gace the Terps a 4-4 record in the conference. VMI has won four and lost three against loop foes.

Fitzpatrick didn't give up a hit until after two were out in the fourth.

Yale Defeats Navy, 5 to 4

New Haven, Conn., April 30 (AP). — Lou Kreutzer's single with the bases loaded in the tenth inning enabled Yale to beat Navy, 5-4, today in a spirited Eastern Intercollegiate League baseball encounter. Kreutzer's hit tallied Captain Art Fitzgerald, who had been passed to open the frame.

Prior to that, Dick Cook's three-bagger with the bases loaded and Paul Lambert's double scoring Cook gave Yale a 4-3 lead at the end of the sixth. Timely hitting by Cal Killeen featured the Navy attack.

Jupe Pluvins Breaks Up Game In Clutch

Seattle, April 30 (AP).—It was one of those storybook scripts: the bases full, one out in the last of the ninth, the score tied, 3-all, and the count three and two on high school hitter Bob Stephenson.

Then the script went haywire.

It was raining hard, so Umpire Leo Taylor called the game.

The Montgomery County League champion and runnerup will divide a $500 prize at the end of the season . . .

But Not in Chesapeake

Bluefish Seen in Frying Pan Shoals, That Is, Off Carolina

By Ralph Murdock

NO DOUBT SOME of the old-timers would like to have some news regarding the bluefish, a rare commodity up to this point except that some commercial fishermen working out of Southport, N. C., have sighted schools of them along the Frying Pan Shoals.

The Gulf Stream passes the Frying Pan Lightship about 52 miles from shore and if the blues continue to follow this lane our hopes of battling these fish in Chesapeake Bay will be very dim. Some small blues have entered this lower body of water in the last few years, but all have weighed under 2 pounds. Anglers will recall that the run of large blues in 1938 reached as high as 13 pounds.

THE HERRING "snaggers" are really having things their own way. Fishermen leaving the Chain Bridge area are carrying them away on stringers, in grass sacks and in baskets.

C. E. Renn, Charles S. Hobbs and C. B. Troxler were shouldering three bags of herring when they went home. Renn said, "The water is black with herring. We didn't count our fish but I'm sure we have over 600."

Hobbs explained that he was going to freeze his fish. He explained that the trio, after making the trip from Frederick, Md., had fished for five hours. It was one of their weekly trips to this area since the herring run started in the Potomac.

TWO WASHINGTONIANS, Arthur Cook, the National and Olympic rifle champion, and Walter Welsh, the pistol expert, are featured in the Bill Stern Columbia Pictures sports short, "Trigger Magic," which is playing at the Metropolitan Theater.

J. R. YOUNG and Al Schwesser, fly rod fishermen who confine their angling efforts to trout fishing, recently made a two-day trip to Hunting Creek. They caught 16 trout, none over 10 inches, and as enthusiastic conservationists they released all the fish. They also fished Beaver and Middle Creeks with poor results.

The last effort of these two anglers resulted in a catch of five trout in Rock Creek near Rockville. All were 9 inches or under and released.

BENEDICT AND SOLOMON'S ISLAND should be the best bets for catching hardheads over the weekend. We advise using shrimp for best results and are informed that a large number of small boats are available at both places.

The Patuxent River is clear and perch and shad fishing should be at its best. Large catches have been announced. Carry a large quantity of lures with you because snags are plentiful.

Lord Grillo, at 17-to-1, Wins 'Graw Handicap by Nose

Chains Beats Out Nearway For Second

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Havre de Grace, Md., April 30. Charging between horses to get to the front, Lord Grillo withstood a long drive today to win the $15,000 added Havre de Grace handicap by a scant nose margin.

The South American-bred horse, carrying the colors of Gustave Ring of Washington, D. C., held on doggedly to take the decision via the camera from Brookmeade Stable's Chains in a finish so close that many in the crowd of 14,982 believed they had witnessed a dead heat.

C. C. Tanner's Nearway, double stake winner at Bowie, was third and two lengths ahead of Calumet Farm's Faultless, a rotten disappointment, having been backed down to even money by the weekend and regular customers.

Lord Grillo, shipped here from New York apparently to get away from Calumet's Coaltown in the Gallant Fox Handicap, was little regarded by the bettors and returned a $36.20 win mutuel to his scattered backers.

Clocked in Fast Time

Strongly and luckily (he got through a narrow opening) ridden by Jockey Mike Basile, Lord Grillo was clocked in 1:50 1-5 for the mile and a furlong, only four fifths over the track record set in this handicap last year by the Jeffords Stable's Natchez. The track was as fast as it ever will be.

Lord Grillo, saddled by C. M. Feltner, former Berryville, Va., sheriff, made it four victories in 12 tries this year. He picked up $11,925 to bring his 1949 earnings to a substantial $24,850.

The winner was as lucky as Chains, ridden by Jockey J. D. Jessop, was unlucky. The lightweight of the party with 107 pounds, the Firethorn, 4-year-old was shuffled back and was forced to come to the outside in the closing drive.

Nearway broke in front as starter Eddie Blind got the field away in good order. Faultless then went to the top accompanied by Chains, with Nearway and Lord Grillo close up.

Approaching the far turn, Basile believed he saw an opening and shot Lord Grillo through and the 6-year-old showed in front. In this maneuver Chains was forced back and Faultless tried to stay with the new pacemaker. Nearway was third at this stage and very much in contention.

Lord Grillo Takes Lead

Going into the stretch Lord Grillo had a half-length lead over Nearway, with the tiring Faultless still a factor and Chains fourth. In the final drive Lord Grillo continued to round away on top and Chains, finally in driving position on the outside, began to wear down the South American horse.

In the closing drive, Chains gradually cut down Lord Grillo's margin despite the fact that Basile, aboard Lord Grillo, was throwing his whip in the Brookmeade Stable hope's face. Chains was gaining going into the wire but distance ran out on him.

Nearway was a wary third and Faultless was a more tired fourth. Up the race track, beaten off and apparently with no excuses were H. L. Straus' Pilaster, the 1948 distance champion, and G. R. Watkins' Cat Bridge, the only other members of the WDC Club, the initials standing for "We Ducked Coaltown."

Longshot Harry McGuigon had his inning again today. He started the program with a $20 success aboard G. S. Smith's Proud Reward. Those who coupled this winner with Mrs. S. Diaz's Trance Sleeper, who took the second race at $18, collected a $119.20 daily double on the 2 and 3 combination. However, a parlay on the two winners figured $180.

Increase of 300

Johnson Kids Turnout Soars To 3300 at Second Session

Good weather and the first intrasquad games brought out 3300 youngsters—an increase of 300—to the second session of the Walter Johnson Memorial Baseball School yesterday.

At Takoma, where Bill Herbert, former Giants' pitcher, was in charge, 350 boys, an all-time record, were on hand.

And at Anacostia, where Wiggie Kidwell, former Eastern High catcher, was in command, 239 boys registered for another record.

It paid to come early at the Hearst playground class. The first 50 who check in with the registrar were presented with free tickets to the circus by Charlie Garner, former Wilson High catcher.

The "voice of the pupils" was heard at the Hearst class. During the first week, eight boys wrote the word "batting" in the registration card blank after "favorite position."

So Col. Robert Pierce, who has volunteered to help the Recreation Department leaders at Hearst since the Johnson School first started took the mound and pitched an hour's batting practice.

Two more weekly sessions are planned, the next one on Saturday. More former professional and sandlot baseball stars will do the lecturing at these.

For the final sessions on May 14 at the 22 playground locations, the Nats, back from their road trip, will again take charge.

Diplomas will then be presented to those pupils who have good attendance records at the four sessions. Each boy who receives a diploma will then be assigned to a team in the Johnson School League, which will operate during the summer.

The Charlotte Blues of North Carolina will provide the opposition today as the Washington Homestead Grays launch their 1949 season at Griffith Stadium in a twin bill at 2 p. m.

This afternoon's doubleheader marks their first start in the new setup. Manager Sammy Bankhead has built the club around Buck Leonard, first base; Clarence Bruce, second base; Charles Gary, third base; Nap Napier and George Clifford, catchers; Wilbur Fields, R. T. At Havre De Grace

One of the most disobeyed rules of Maryland racing is the one that says jockeys must be named for horses at the time of entry. In fact, the horsemen who don't make known their riders at this time are in the majority. It is surprising, too, how many horses win whose jockeys are not even on the printed program. Havre de Grace needs a new results and odds board. The present one can't be read by customers in the far end of the clubhouse or the up-the-stretch portion of the grandstand. Most tracks have two identical boards facing at angles. Big week coming up. Havre de Grace and Charles Town conflict up to Wednesday. Charles Town has Thursday to itself and then closes to allow Pimlico to open on Friday where the Dixie Handicap will be the Saturday attraction but will be overshadowed nationally by the Kentucky Derby.

4 Redskins To Play With All-Stars

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

It may be somewhat out of season to mention football, but sponsors of the annual Collegiate All-Star game in Chicago will be interested in knowing they'll have no interference from the Washington Redskins in their talent search this year.

Four Redskins rookies already have received invitations to the Soldier Field Classic. One or two more may get bids.

All will write nice little notes of acceptance and, unless something unforeseen turns up, show up for the big game August 12.

This amicable turn of events, practically guaranteed by Redskin headquarters, is in direct contrast to last season. Then, you will remember, the "Harry Gilmer Case" caused a lot of name-calling, inked up great masses of clean newsprint, and wound up with the threat of a law suit that never came off.

Appearing in this year's All-Star lineup against the Philadelphia Eagles, as professional champions, will be a foursome including Washington's top three choices in the latest pro draft. Halfback Bob Goode of Texas A. & M., is No. 1; second is Tackle Lauri Niemi of Washington State; and No. 3 is Tackle Len Szafaryn of North Carolina.

Also invited is Southern California's giant tackle, Bob Hendren, drafted by the Redskins several years ago. The local pros expect Halfback Jack Kirby, "money" player from U. S. C., to get a bid, too.

If these stars perform, with no demands for high insurance coverage, it will be the start of an armistice between Redskin Owner George Marshall and Arch Ward, sports editor of the Chicago Tribune which sponsors the All-Star game.

The war between these two started last summer when Gilmer, Washington's prize rookie from Alabama, insisted that Ward give him insurance coverage for the full life of his Redskin contract. The suspicion was that Marshall prompted the demand and there followed some hot-and-heavy verbiage between Georgous George and Ward.

Gilmer sat out the 1948 All-Star game, then came up with an early-season injury which kept him out of National Football League action, except for six plays, all season.

FROM TUSCALOOSA, Ala., comes word that Gilmer is back in perfect shape . . . He worked out with University of Alabama gridmen all spring, played golf and hunted every day before getting an okay from Dr. Robert Moran, Redskin physician, at a meeting in Mobile . . . He didn't get the benefit of the GI bill, but Rear Admiral John Welchel, USN, received some valuable instruction at Notre Dame last week . . . The new Redskin coach was considered an apt student by Prof. Frank Leahy, who teaches football's T-formation with considerable success . . . West Virginia University has signed Tiger Walton, line coach of the 'Skins last season . . . Invited to play in the New York All-Star game in August is Ed Berrang, Villanova end, who was the Redskins' No. 5 draft choice in '48.

Comiskey Will Report Thursday For May 9 Scrap

Pat Comiskey, 6-foot 3-inch, 215-pound Paterson, N. J., heavyweight, will report here Thursday to complete training for his scheduled 10-round boxing bout with Elkins Brothers on the Liberty Athletic Club's opening outdoor boxing show at Griffith Stadium a week from tomorrow night, May 9.

Brothers, already in training here, starts boxing tomorrow against sparring partners at the Liberty Club's gymnasium.

Joe Blackwood, local middleweight and Roger Muriel, 21-year-old boxer from Elizabeth, N. J., also are to work out here in preparation for their co-featured 10 rounder on the same show.

Londos Returns To Meet McCoy

The return of Jim Londos features the weekly mat card at Joe Turner's Arena Wednesday night. Londos has been paired with burly Bibber McCoy, 235-pound Bostonian.

The semiwindup pits Gene (Mr. America) Stanlee against Trich Holmbach, a massive Swedish star who has been called "The Chest."

College Golf Final Postponed By Rain

Athens, Ga., April 30 (AP).—Rain washed out the finals of the Southern intercollegiate golf tournament today.

The title match between Defending Champion Al Besselink of the University of Miami and darkhorse Dave Smith of the University of South Carolina will be played Monday.

Plebe Netmen Trounce Coolidge, 7-2

Annapolis, Md., April 30 (AP).—Navy's plebe netmen trounced Coolidge High School's tennis team today, 7 to 2.

Sutter won the Washington school's only singles match as he overcame Jim Organ on the No. 1 court, 2—6, 6—2, 6—2.

Bob Jordan Gets 3 Hits For Champs

Cameo Furniture Co. opened defense of its Washington Post-Industrial League baseball championship with a 6-3 victory over the Heurich Brewers yesterday on the West Ellipse.

The loss was a costly one for the Brewers because they also lost their catcher, Jim Castiglia, for several weeks. The Redskins' fullback broke the first finger on his right hand when a foul tip off Max Coe's bat struck him.

Bob Jordan paced the champs with a triple and two singles which accounted for four runs.

Coaltown Gets 136-Pound Load For Dixie 'Cap

Havre de Grace, Md., April 30.—Gallant Fox Handicap at Jamaica.

Trainer Jimmy Jones, who has gone on record as saying Coaltown will not run with more than 130 pounds, has not been heard from.

Opinion here is that even at 136 pounds it will be difficult to muster a field with Coaltown in action and there is a possibility of another walkover as was the case in the local Burke Handicap. Faultless, Coaltown's stablemate, gets in the Dixie with 120, the same as H. L. Straus' Pilaster. Other weights range from Better Self's 118 down to 100-pound assignments for Halconero and Dart By.

Calumet Farm's Coaltown has been assigned 136 pounds for the $25,000 Dixie Handicap next Saturday at Pimlico, Racing Secretary Charles J. McLennan announced today after the Bull Lea colt won the

Maryland Hunt Won By Pine Pet

By Harry De Mawby, jr.

Glydon, Md., April 30.—Upward of 35,000 thrilled spectators saws Mrs. William J. Clothier's Philadelphia-owned Pine Pet gallop to victory in the Maryland Hunt Cup, top timber classic of the Nation on the beautiful J. W. Y. Martin estate here today.

Pine Pet, a 9-year-old stronghearted chestnut, son of Petee Rack-Red Queen, was expertly ridden by Mike Smithwick, one of the countries foremost amateur riders.

Under steady restraint for the first three and a half miles, the big chestnut gelding was moved up on even terms with the pace-setting Cormack going to the eighteenth fence and then urged into a five-length lead which was steadily increased to some 10 lengths before the twenty-second and final jump.

Galloping easily, Pine Pet, crossed the finish line a good 12 lengths in front of Mrs. Elizabeth C. Bosley's outsider, Myster Mars, given an outstanding ride by Austin Brown.

Suffering his only defeat of the year, the 16-year-old Eugene Weymouth's owner-ridden Cormack moved up from second position to take the lead over a strung-out field after the fifth fence and the gallant 6-year-old who broke down and was pulled up at the next to the last jump.

Another outsider, Mrs. John V. Hannum III's Our Hobo, crossed the wire in third place 10 lengths behind Myster Mars.

Tragedy again left its mark in the Hunt Cup records. Reminiscent of the loss of the great Troublemaker, whose gallant career ended on the same course nearly a decade ago, James McHenry's Dunlora was moved into brief command 30 yards in front of the seventeenth fence but the game chestnut mare, half sister of the victor, made a bad jump and upset, suffering a broken neck, and succumbed immediately. Her rider Walter Brewster, reportedly suffered a broken collarbone in the mishap.

Yale Crew Noses Out Navy By 2½ Lengths; Cornell Third

Annapolis, Md., April 30 (AP).—Yale's crew, moving down the Severn River like a powerful machine, swept to a decisive victory over Navy and Cornell today.

Yale came from behind midway in the mile and three quarters race to beat back a desperate Navy surge by about two and a half lengths. Cornell was third by about three lengths.

Riding downstream into a 12-knot quartering wind, Yale finished in 9 minutes 58 seconds. Navy's time was 10:08 and Cornell's 10:19.3.

Yale also won the junior varsity race over Cornell and Navy in the 66-degree topcoat weather. Increasing its starting lead an inch at a time, the Yale J. V. crew finished in 9:15. Cornell, a couple of lengths back, was timed in 9:22.5, just about two feet in front of Navy, which was third in 9:22.7.

The Navy Plebes won the upstream freshman race behind a 5-knot tail wind in 8:58, to salvage one victory for Coach Buck Walsh at the start of his eighteenth season as head man at Annapolis. Cornell's frosh were a length and a quarter behind in 9:04 and Yale, off to a poor start, finished in 9:12.

A crowd of about 1000 witnessed the regatta aboard a score of Navy YP-boats and private yachts under leaden skies.

Robertson made possible Vollmer's two-run homer in the third. With two out, he lashed a triple against the wall in right. The pitch that Vollmer hit was a 3-and-2 fast ball that was faster going than coming.

Al Evans opened the ninth against Harris with a single to left and the Nats played for one run and got two. Calvert sacrificed and after Coan flied out, Lewis hit his timely wallop over the wall in right. That was the crusher.

U. S. Expects Vast Wheat Stockpile As Loans Expire

By the United Press

The Government today expected to find itself in possession of more than half the wheat in the country.

At last count, farmers had placed more than 240 million bushels of 1948-crop wheat under the Government price support loan program.

The loans expired at midnight last night. Unless the farmer repaid his loan by then, the Government will own his wheat.

Agriculture Department officials expected that few farmers would pay off and reclaim their grain because wheat has been selling in the market at a price slightly below the Government's support price at which the loans were made.

The Government already owns outright in the neighborhood of 40 million bushels of wheat, purchased under the Government's Foreign Supply Program and scheduled for shipment to deficit areas abroad.

Counting this with the "loan" wheat, the Government today probably will have a wheat stockpile on its hands of considerably more than 250 million bushels. The Nation's total supply is said to be around 500 million bushels.

Indians Put Dam Completion Loss At $21,981,000

By The Associated Press

Tribal officials from the Fort Berthold Indian reservation in North Dakota said yesterday that completion of the Garrison Dam will cause $21,981,000 damage to tribal properties.

They told a House Public Lands Subcommittee, however, that they are willing to accept $14,605,625, as proposed in a bill by Representative Lemke (R., S. Dak.), in full settlement of their claims.

Of this amount, $5,105,625 already had been appropriated by Congress but has not been accepted by the Indians.

Carl Whitman, jr., chairman of the Tribal Business Council, said that backwaters from the Garrison Dam will flood 155,000 acres of the reservation's best river bottom land and force removal of all homes and schools along the river.

Nathan Little Soldier said the 2215 members of the three affiliated tribes in the reservation will have to remove to other lands.

Police said the find included "huge quantities" of cordite and gelignite (two powerful explosives); more than two million rounds of ammunition; 1500 hand grenades; 150 automatic weapons and a mobile radio transmitter.

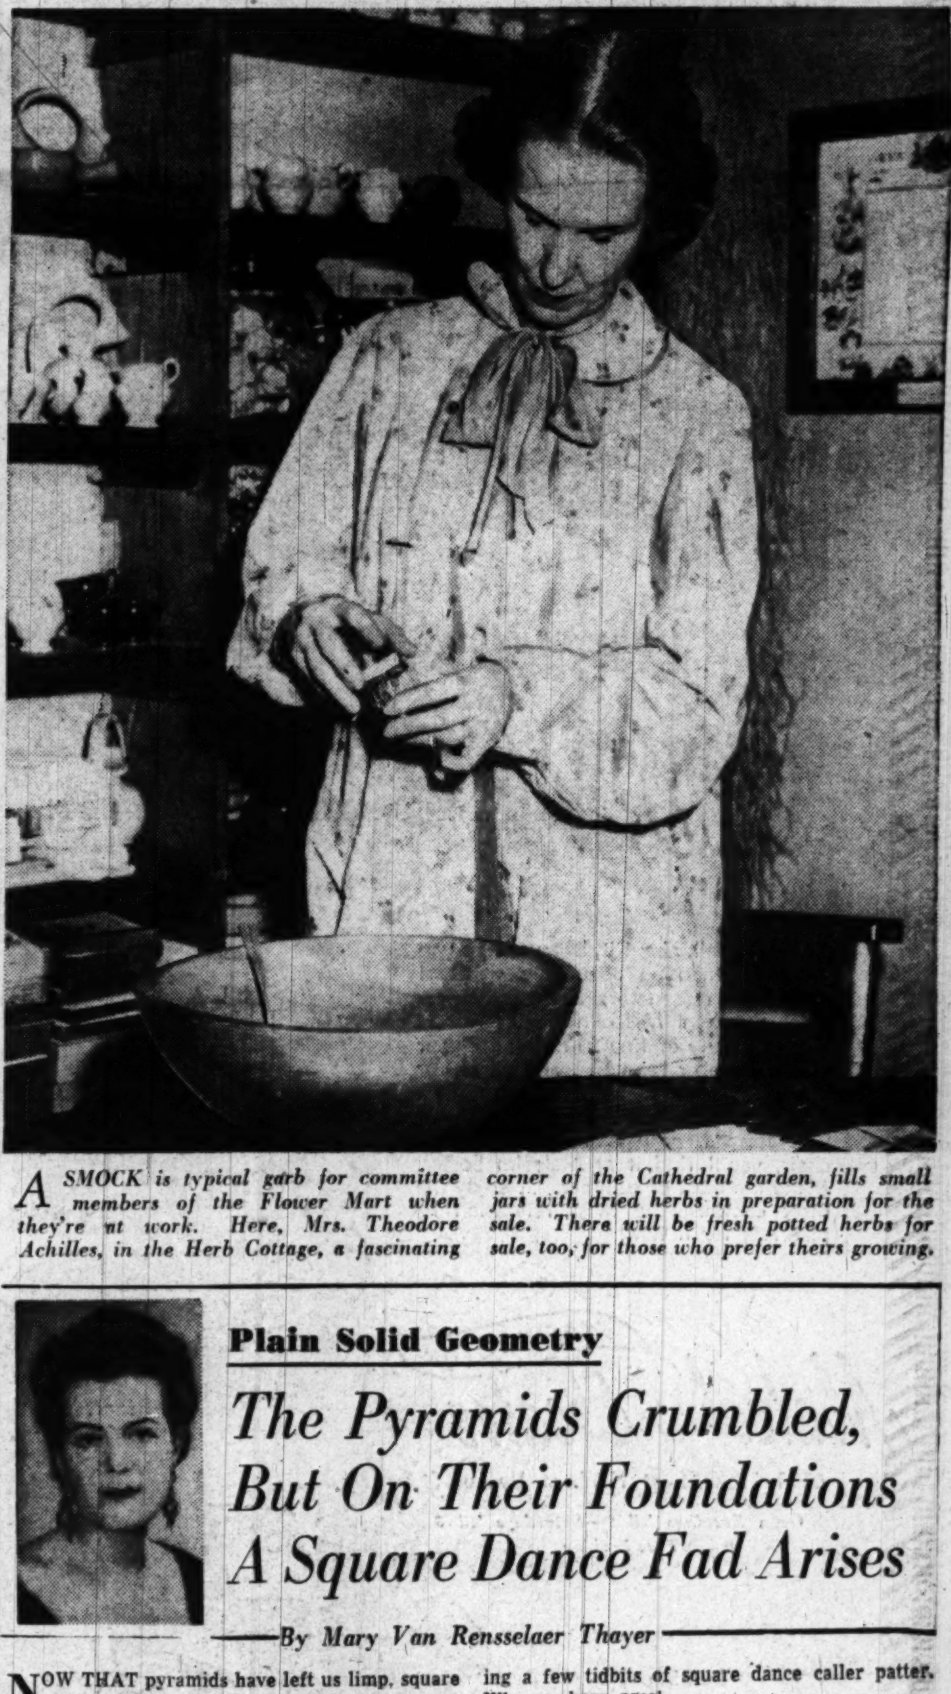
AGAINST the background of the great Cathedral with its flying buttresses, arches and spires, booths for the annual Flower Mart will be set up along the Pilgrim Steps. Old boxwood provides a green curtain for the awninged stalls

Myriad Blooms On Pilgrim Steps For Flower Fete

MRS. LEWIS CLARK, wife of the United States Minister to China, and Mrs. David S. Barry (right), chairman of the 1949 Flower Mart, are happy over the total of 37 garden clubs in Washington and nearby Maryland and Virginia which are participating in this year's outdoor fete. Mrs. Clark is one of Mrs. Barry's four cochairmen

THE FRESHEST of spring vegetables will be on sale at the green vegetable booth at the head of the Pilgrim Steps on Friday. Mrs. John L. Newbold (left), and Mrs. Forrester Davison, two active workers for the mart, look over their grocer's supply in hopes of gleaning a few salesmanship pointers on the corn on the cob and radishes. Their booth is one of the many to be open for business Friday on Pilgrim Steps



A SMOCK is typical garb for committee members of the Flower Mart when they're at work. Here, Mrs. Theodore Achilles, in the Herb Cottage, a fascinating corner of the Cathedral garden, fills small jars with dried herbs in preparation for the sale. There will be fresh potted herbs for sale, too, for those who prefer theirs growing.

Chase-Statler Photos.

SELECTING seedlings is a pleasant job for Mrs. William J. Flather and her daughter, Mrs. Neville Connolly, who'll have the seedlings booth at the Flower Mart. Mrs. Flather, chairman of the booth, and members of her committee have a down-to-earth job, for they do their work wielding trowels

At Home of Baron von Platen

Guests Hail Springtime In the Swedish Tradition

By Marie McNair

Spring comes late to the forests and the rocky coast of Sweden. It is welcomed on the last day of April, a fete day particularly for students, the people of the soil. Huge bonfires spring up all over the countryside; groups gather to sing the old songs of their native land.

No fires blazed at Baron von Platen's house last night, but guests danced and sang Swedish songs to celebrate the coming of spring.

Baron von Platen, First Secretary of the Swedish Embassy, and another First Secretary, Per Lind, with Mme. Lind entertained about half a hundred of their friends at this Swedish festival, among them the Counselor of the Swedish Embassy and Mme. Aminoff, the Secretary of the Danish Embassy and Countess Moltke, the Ted Achesons, Comdr. Vincent Sweeney, Charles Rogers, who heads the Swedish desk at the State Department, and Mrs. Rogers; George Baker of the State Department, the Economic Counselor of the Danish Embassy and Mme. Seidenfaden, the Naval Attache of the Swedish Embassy and Mme. de Croneborg and, up from their farm in Virginia, the former Counselor of the Swedish Embassy, Count Wachtmeister, and Countess Wachtmeister.

India's Charge d'Affaires and Mme. Chopra are preparing to leave Washington now that the new Ambassador, Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, is on her way.

The Chopras will leave Washington on the 8th, sail from New York on the Queen Mary for London to spend a week or so before starting again for India. The Richard Sangers will give them a farewell party May 7 and Elbert Matthews, also of the State Department, and Mrs. Matthews will entertain at dinner for them next Wednesday.

TOWN TOPICS:

Senora de Berckemeyer, American-born wife of the new Peruvian Ambassador, is tall, slim and suntanned, could easily pass for a Latin. Oddly enough, her English has ever so slight an accent, which she herself can't account for. Unless, she says, it comes from association with her Spanish-speaking husband. Six years in London, three of them war years—Senora de Berckemeyer has nothing but the highest praise for the British. Living in foreign lands during her married life, the Peruvian Embassy's new hostess has yet to be more than a visitor to the Ambassador's native land.

For 50 years as editor of one of the country's outstanding publications, Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, head of the National Geographic Society's magazine, will be honor guest at a dinner to be given by the board of trustees of the society on Wednesday evening, May 18, at the Chevy Chase Club. Mrs. Grosvenor will share honors with her husband. The Pyramids Crumbled, But On Their Foundations A Square Dance Fad Arises

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

NOW THAT pyramids have left us limp, square dancing is slated to drive everyone to warm-weather frenzy. It's stomping relentlessly through Texas and all too soon will tornado here. First storm warning was last night's Texas State Society dance at the Shoreham when guests (except Attorney General Clark and Senator Connally whose social schedule forced them to turn up in unimaginative dinner jackets) came in gingham dresses and bonnets, tight pants, high boots, 10-gallon hats, prepared to heel-and-toe-it like mad. So it's far easier for the average gregarious Washingtonian (provided wind and limb are sound) to give in, join the initiates by learning a few tidbits of square dance caller patter. Whoops, here goes!

Ladies to the center and back to the bar
Gents to the center and form a star—

Meet your pretty girl, pass her by
And hook the next gal on the fly

All join hands and away we go
Break that ring with a do-se-do

Meet your honey and pat her on the head
If she don't like biscuit, feed her cornbread.

Callers—those who "call" the different steps—are in great demand and among the more expert

Having Married Brisk Widow, Bachelor Now Strongly Insists That She Review Every Act, Share Every Thought With Him; She Ponders

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: After 10 years' happy marriage I was widowed three years ago, and recently I married again, this time a bachelor 6 years my senior. Ralph is wonderful in every way and we seem, so far, to be completely compatible.

Then what is the problem? Simply this: Ralph is overwhelmingly possessive. He wants to know every thought I think; every dream, every fear or complex I have; the finest details of what I do when we are apart. In short, he wants us to be as close as is humanly possible.

While I love him deeply and wish to be all things to him, as he desires, and while I love the dear proximities of the married state, especially with him, still it is hard for me to remember at times that I am married again, much less married to him "without reservation," as he would like me to be.

Woman Treasured Past Independence

RECENTLY I made an independent decision in a business matter, acting impetuously as in former years, without thinking to consult him, and when it came to his attention he was deeply hurt because I had "failed to share" the problem with him. Of course he soon forgave me, but he has strongly impressed upon me since that I must bring everything, every thought, to him.

Ralph declares he has no wish to erase my identity or to submerge my personality in his; but such will happen if the pressure continues. Already I feel the first disintegration; and my independence was sweet to me. I have dreaded giving it up.

I am not ungrateful that he loves and needs me; but is it unwise to let him persuade me to his way of thinking? Should I resist; or would our marriage be finer and steadier if I do surrender entirely? Does the novelty of marriage in his experience account for his attitude; or is it an expression of desire to dominate? I feel now that he is far stronger than I; and he seems to have accepted the married state more completely. What should I do? C.

Man's Projecting Anxiety Neurosis

DEAR E. C.: It seems to me that Ralph's behavior refers to diffuse anxiety and insecurity; and that his possessive desire to completely invade your personality, sharing every thought, reviewing every detail of your actions when out of his sight, etc., is an expression of jealous fear, lest the "love-object" somehow forget, overlook or neglect him. Psychiatrists see in such behavior a lonely, frightened, compulsive drive to retreat from life back to the sanctuary of the womb; and doubtless Ralph's demands on you, to "merge" completely with him, are infantile and (on the unconscious level) hysterically obdurate.

Thus the emotional intensity of his attitude may confuse and override your rational disposition to exercise a happy blend of individual reliance and essential cooperation in double harness; but his victory doesn't mean that he is the stronger of the two. Rather it signifies that the strain of his weak dependency exhausts you to the point of "no resistance" to the abnormal burden.

Don't Surrender; Seek Compromise

VERY LIKELY Ralph was captivated, firstly and wholly, by your independent fiber and contented air of certitude in coping with life; and possibly you are a bit headlong about taking the bit in your teeth, without consulting others' ideas, when a decision is to be made. Hence some thoughtful restraint of characteristic impetuosity may be advisable on your part, to strike an accommodating gait in marriage. But total surrender to Ralph's peculiar bias isn't sensible, in my opinion.

Dr. Alexander Magoun's book, "Love and Marriage" (Harper & Brothers), should be studied by both of you, for clear perspective on the implications of his behavior, and for substantial instruction on how to relieve his symptoms at the source—if he will respond to honest teaching. M. H.

THROUGH a doorway marked "The Way of Peace," students at the Beauvoir School emerge from Bethlehem Chapel following a special monthly service. This year special emphasis is being placed on the world-wide application of "The Way of Peace" in a series of class exercises devoted to an understanding of people in other lands and of the United Nations. These students have undertaken a program that starts with nursery school's "study" of foreign costumes and legends, to make these children part of a "love-linked world"

'Love Thy Neighbor' on a Global Scale

Rearing Children Into the Brotherhood of Man

By Sonia Stein

"IT'S A big, wide, wonderful world when you're in love" and tots at the Beauvoir School are finding out all about how wonderful it is when brotherly love is spread around the world.

At the National Cathedral Elementary School the emphasis has been on "world-mindedness" this year, with a generous secondary emphasis on brotherly love to help the world go 'round in the nicest way.

The regular activities of the youngsters have been tied in with the "world-mindedness" project in very concrete fashion. At this school, which accepts youngsters from 3 to 8 years, many of the tiny scholars are already veteran world travelers when they come to school.

One of the children spent a year in Turkey and usually comes up with a Turkish motif in her paintings. Another youngster is the son of a diplomat from the Netherlands Embassy. A third one spent a year in France and suggested that his class study France—a suggestion heartily approved by another youngster because "I have a French poodle myself."

First graders, given a choice of countries to study, chose Switzerland, the Netherlands and France. The three sections exchanged ideas in assemblies, sharing their discoveries. Second graders, who normally study American Indians, gave an international fillip to their work by studying Indians in Mexico. They engaged in correspondence with a tribe of Navajo Indians and learned how to say brotherly love in Navajo. Because it is primarily a Christian expression, it comes up in rather complicated form in foreign languages, the children found. In Navajo, for example, it's "my brother cares for me." In Siamese, it's "love of the kind found among relatives." Seniors" in the third grade found themselves impressed with the international qualities of their special studies of the stars. On a world map, they colored in each country as they found a fact about the planetary system and the stellar universe discovered in that country. The fact discovered was written in the margin and connected with a ribbon and a shiny, gold star to the appropriate country.

A parallel is drawn between the sky which is shared by all peoples, and brotherly love which is shared by all.

Even the kindergarten and nursery set share in the "world-mindedness" study. Listening to stories and legends, and dressing up in costumes is an endless source of amusement to them, and if they have a foreign flavor the youngsters like them all the better.

In the kindergarten group, a huge globe was made and painted. "My, there's a lot of water," said one miniature painter, learning fact one about the world the hard way. Cutouts of kangaroos, whales, Eskimo huskies and the Washington Monument were pasted on in the right places.

Many of the finished works were gathered together in the large music and dancing room so the children could learn from the work done by each other, and where the parents learned at a tea given there last Sunday, what their offspring had been up to all year. The walls were hung with paintings of foreign countries as the children imagined them, the tables were populated with clay elephants and giraffes running among thatched houses and palm trees, and Eskimo huskies cavorting around plaster igloos.

Charts showing the representative nature of the United Nations organization, and posters explaining that "Only brotherly love will make the tree (of the U. N.) grow," were also hung.

"Instead of stressing difference, as is usual, we have stressed similarities," explained Mrs. Elizabeth G. Taylor, principal of the school since its founding 16 years ago. "The sameness of people in all parts of the world—their basic needs and desires, likes and customs were emphasized. Naturally the differences in external things become apparent, but we have tried to keep in mind that man's fundamental make-up is somewhat the same regardless of color of skin or places of abode.'

Next year Mrs. Taylor plans to continue the experiment in the teaching of "world-mindedness," culminating in the spring with a play about a little boy who wants to eat and play only with things that are entirely American, and discovers it doesn't leave him very much.

Your Child From 6 to 12

Child's Feeling of Belonging Is Foundation for Future Dignity

Editor's Note: Among the all-time best sellers of the Government Printing Office is the series of booklets by the Children's Bureau on child rearing. This is the first of six articles based on material in the latest booklet "Your Child From 6 to 12."

By David Taylor Marke

Associated Press Newsfeatures Writer

THOUGHTFUL parents will appreciate "Your Child From 6 to 12." It is a booklet just published by the Children's Bureau, Federal Security Agency.

The school-age child, says the bureau, is becoming a self-contained, self-directed, self-motivated person. He still wants love and sympathy from his parents, but he has his own friends and tastes. He is a lively (and often exasperating) creature.

Six to 12-year-old children are not alike. They are different and surprising. But here are some generalizations that can be made.

Once a child has good control of his body, he spends much energy perfecting skills and adding new ones. Little girls like hopscotch and jacks with their precise muscular adjustments. Learning to write brings exact coordination and adjustment between hand and eye. Playing an instrument and typing should start. But the children can't get enough chasing, climbing, dodging.

Imagination is at a peak. The child becomes what he has read or heard about. He recreates life about him. Boys build houses. Girls set up housekeeping in them. Carts, kites, airplanes, paper dolls and their dresses, weaving, knot-tying and carving are part of an endless list that combine imagination and muscular skills.

Best Friend

ANIMALS are children's close kin. The boy and his dog have unbreakable ties. Joy in nature matches delight in working with hands.

Experimentation leads everywhere. Children taste the sweet, growing ends of grass, the tang of pine needles. They make leaves squawk, burrow in haystacks, run panting after fire engines. They are underfoot, watching when the plumber comes.

Guessing games, riddles, jokes, code language have their day. Table games take lots of time. But it is painful to learn someone must lose. And learning to lose paves the way for later team play.

Sleeping is a bore, eating is a joy. If the food is good, gobble it. If you must eat what you don't like, gulp it fast. And who invented the nonsense of eating at fixed hours?

The 6-to-12 learns, too, about clothes. Shoes, caps, dresses or hairdos unlike those of most children can cause acute humiliation.

At about the age of 9 or 10, girls and boys become intolerant of each other, but under exaggerated contempt lurks an attraction that will be strong in later years.

Brother and sister are allies one minute, scrappy as alley cats the next. Johnny tickles Polly, Polly tattles in a disagreeable way. But let an outsider pick on one and the other flies to the defense. Either may try to skip the daily bath for more playtime. But they may each claim the bathroom at the same time when they do decide to bathe.

Parents would like rules on how to direct these eruptions of energy. But there is no magic formula to direct the lives of children.

International Relations Group Sets 'Get Acquainted' Tea

The International Relations Committee of the District Business and Professional Women's Clubs will hold a "get acquainted" tea for members, from 3 to 5 p. m. Sunday, at 2 Scott Circle. Guest of honor will be the club's president. Miss Genevieve Rogers.

Also expected to attend is Dr. Elizabeth Conrad, president of the Washington branch, American Association of University Women, who headed the BPW's international relations committee last year. Miss Julie Maria Sopp-Colbjorsen, current chairman, will preside.

Highlight of the tea will be a concert by Miss Ruth Linrud, harpist.

Danish Liberation Day Was Twice Blessed

It was on May 5, 1945, that Denmark was liberated from Germany. That day is doubly memorable for Carlo Christensen, Vice Consul at the Embassy here. He was in a Copenhagen prison at the time, next in line for execution.

He was condemned by the Germans for underground activities. He was first driven from the office of Foreign Ministry by the enemy, but established himself in a second-hand book shop, where he operated an underground message center and plotted sabotage. His innocent appearance protected him just so long.

A book on his war-time activities was published six weeks after his liberation, and when he came to this country in December, 1945, he was decorated by General Eisenhower, under whom he worked in Europe.

THE French Ambassador, Henri Bonnet, is returning to Washington today. Mme. Bonnet is still in Paris.

The Vice President of the Italian Senate, Salvatore Aldisio, arrived in Washington yesterday, here for a few days en route to California.

Eamon Kennedy is a new Second Secretary at the Irish Legation.

The British Ambassador, Sir Oliver Franks, left Friday for Princeton to attend the dedication of a new library and to make a speech.

Air Commandant Felicity Hanbury, head of Women's Royal Air Force, arrived in Washington Friday. She is leaving Monday on tour of American air bases.

Outstanding beauties at the Spanish Embassy ball on Thursday evening were Senora de Echegaray, wife of the Spanish Agricultural Attache, and Senora de Rocheta, wife of the Portuguese Counselor. Senora de Echegaray wore a cream colored organdy frock with black velvet sash, and Senora de Rocheta was in midnight blue which matched her eyes.

Holiday Clothes for Capital Career Girls' 'Two Weeks With Pay'

Dimitri Wolkonsky

DENIMS hold a precious place in the vacation wardrobe of the girl with a budget problem. Inexpensive, sturdy, becoming and cut with lots of dash, they are the outfits for picnics, hikes, sports, or that sweetest of all pastimes—just lounging around in the sun. Colors are copper, green and yellow

COOL, pretty and comfortable are these brightly printed cotton skirts and white peasant blouses. Outfits such as these take to a vacation in the country with the greatest of ease. Both are priced to please the business girl's budget. This costume, and others pictured here, were shown at a fashion show at the Shoreham Hotel by Jelleff's

TERRY cloth is the season's best bet for sailing and beachwear. Made into cute, tricky styles, it is easily washed, will keep a sparkling freshness throughout your holiday. Costume above includes bra, shorts and middy, which can also double as towel or beach cloth. Short, jaunty beach coat is for warmth after an icy dip

AIR-BOUND for the playground of her choice, the career gal wears a "10-below" suit, made of lightweight spun rayon, a cool summer cloth. There are good details on this nicely priced costume, including hand-sewn buttonholes and well-fitted waistline. Comes in a range of pastel shades, navy and black

By Peggy Preston

THAT FINE, old American custom, the annual "Two Weeks With Pay," is about to be revived for summer, 1949.

To the business girls, and their more sophisticated sisters, the career gals, goes much of the credit for establishing this worthy tradition. At least they are the ones who have made it what it is today—the white collar girl's unalienable right to a sun-soaked holiday which she can pay for with the dividends from two workless weeks.

By the time June rolls around, the office miss may or may not have decided where to go on her holiday. Womanlike, she may never make up her mind. Maybe she will just sit out the two weeks in her own back yard. But 10 to 1, she has figured out an angle for a new wardrobe.

She's on safe ground there. For whether she stays home and melts through Washington's torrid season, or goes to New York, Virginia Beach, California or Florida, her basic wardrobe needs remain the same.

Here is an outline of what she would need:

1. COTTONS AND SANDALS. Several slim, well-fitting dresses, or skirt, blouse and jacket ensembles. These can take her anywhere, from jaunts along New York's Fifth Avenue, to strolls in country lanes. Open-toed sandals, in straw, pastel tinted suede, black or white, will be cool and comfortable, suitable for any occasion.

2. A COTTON POPLIN, full length coat, to see four-dimensional service for travel, rain, beach, and evening.

3. ONE PRETTY FROCK for dress-up occasions. May be pastel hued or printed. Fabrics may be chosen among crepe, shantung, chiffon, voile or organdie.

4. ONE DANCE FROCK in any of the above fabrics, cut with strapless bodice, full skirt; bolero or stole, according to taste.

5. A SET OF EFFECTIVE PLAY CLOTHES, collected piece by piece with extra bits of cash, or purchased as an ensemble. Depending on her destination, she will select slacks, petal pushers, long shorts, or shorts, and any type jacket or weskit that strikes her fancy. With them she can wear halter-bra, striped jersey, or cotton blouse.

6. BATHING SUIT in a color to match her play clothes, so that a jacket can become a beach coat.

7. ONE SUMMER STRAW CHAPEAU, straw bag, and a couple of pairs of "shortie" cotton gloves will round out the picture.

Some Soviet Squabbles Are Funny

is Texas' Mrs. Mastin White. Senator Millard Tydings, by the by, can call a tricky Virginia reel and Eric Johnston is pretty smooth, too. There's considerable rivalry between different schools of calling and, naturally, individual callers. The Western type both of dancing and calling is much brisker than the locally more familiar New England brand. Callers of high standing around town are Adelaide Courtnay, Evelyn Knight and Jimmy Lamb, while out Arlington way Arthur Fridings is technically the cat's meow.

Square dance music's special and instead of a conventional orchestra, Miss Madelyn Shepherd's costumed square dance musicians are most popular. Lone Star Staters expert in square dancing include two young Representatives, the Ken Reagans and the Lloyd Bensons. The latter couple, incidentally, are particularly stylish in a gay round dance, the lady stepping fancy in front of the gent—called "Put Your Little Foot."

THE BIG Soviet scraps hit front page and are vastly unfunny. Minor squabbles, which seldom get about, are often highly entertaining. The following incident, reportedly true, happened not long ago when the USSR's Ambassador to France presented his credentials at the Elysee Palace. The French Chef de Protocol, inquiring of his opposite Soviet number what music to play as the Ambassador arrived, was told "The Internationale." Since the revolutionary song seemed a trifle inappropriate, the protocol official arranged a tactful program of incidental Russian music.

The event passed off well enough; the incident was forgotten—until the French Ambassador presented HIS credentials in Moscow. As he entered for the ceremony, instead of the "Marseillaise," the Soviet band whanged out with accustomed verve, the famous "Carmen" aria, "Si tu ne m'aime pas, je t'aime"—which may be very roughly translated, "I'll just love it if you don't love me!"

A Dilly, Miss Lillie!

Every now and then a ridiculous remark gives the most intense pleasure. The other day Miss Bea Lillie, for some reason or another, wandered into a New York business office. Her restless eye, casting about for mischief, spotted a couple of pigeons relaxing on the window sill. Up bounced la Lillie, bee-lined to the window, opened it cautiously and looking a pigeon directly in beady eye, inquired pleasantly: "Any messages?"

Keep Your Eye on the Navy Ball

By Norma Lanum

THE Navy will capture the social limelight next Friday night when hundreds of gold-braided officers and their friends fill the decks of the Statler Hotel's Presidential and Congressional Rooms for the annual Navy Ball.

Highlights of the evening will be the debut before Washington society of the Navy's star vocalist, Petty Officer Ben Mitchell Morris, and the Marine Corps Band's parade drill right in the middle of the dance floor.

Capt. William Gates, executive vice president of the District auxiliary of the Navy Relief Society which is to receive proceeds from the ball, will serve as master of ceremonies. This is one of the society's principal means of raising funds for its social work with the less fortunate members of the Navy and Marine Corps.

Not a Charity—a Friend

THE Navy Relief Society, a hard-working welfare organization, doesn't like to be called a charity.

"We're all just one big family," explains the society's national president, Vice Admiral Vincent R. Murphy (retired), "a family of some 500,000 sailors and Marine Corps leathernecks, who are always willing to help one another through an emergency."

Most sailors live away from home where they are ineligible for aid from local charities. So when an emergency arises, illness or accident in the serviceman's family—an emergency which he cannot meet immediately—the Navy Relief lends a hand.

The society fixes no interest on its loans. In fact, quite often money is given without the obligation to pay it back. "Sometimes it would just make the sailor's situation worse to have a heavy loan facing him," Admiral Murphy explains.

But this doesn't mean the society gives out money indiscriminately. Each case is investigated thoroughly to make certain that the serviceman is unable to meet the emergency without aid, and then to determine just how much of the grant he would be able to pay back, if any, and in what installments. Still the society insits that their aid is given with the least possible amount of "red tape"; so that in some instances it is only a matter of hours before the emergency is met and relieved.

THE SOCIETY'S service to its "brothers" doesn't end with financial aid in cases of illness and accidents. Maybe a Navy wife's allotment check was addressed incorrectly and she is caught without living expenses . . . perhaps a Marine needs immediate transportation across the country to attend a funeral in his family . . . or living costs might be so high in some city that a sailor and his wife have lost control of their budget and need a loan to help them get readjusted . . . The society helps out in all these circumstances.

About Breakfast For 50 Guests

Next month I have to serve breakfast to 40 or 50 people who will take an early morning nature walk and then come to breakfast in our garden at the fireplace. Will you suggest a fairly hearty but inexpensive breakfast that can be prepared in large part the night before? Last year I served hardboiled eggs and mushrooms in cream sauce on toast, fruit juice and sweet buns, coffee, etc.

M. T.

Here is a possible menu: Minted fruit juice, scrambled eggs, crisp bacon, doughnuts or sweet rolls, coffee.

The night before the party, mix canned orange and grapefruit juice, add sugar to taste and crush a handful of fresh young mint leaves into it. Put into glass jars or pitchers and place in refrigerator to chill. Before serving remove mint.

The scrambled eggs could be broken into a large bowl (plan at least one egg per person), beaten slightly and add 2 cups coffee cream and 2 level teaspoons of salt. The bowl should be covered and set away in a cool place until morning. Just before serving they can be cooked in large frying pans which have been greased with bacon fat, at your fireplace.

A large quantity of bacon can be done in the oven very nicely. As a matter of fact, cooking bacon in a slow oven produces a product so far superior to that cooked on the top of the stove, that I have a hunch you'll use the idea when doing only family-sized amounts. Just place the slices of bacon in a large flat pan, they can overlap a little, or on the broiler rack in your broiler pan and put them into a preheated 325 degrees F. oven. They will cook to a delicious nutty brown in about 15 or 20 minutes with no further attention from you. Or, if you didn't wish to go to the expense of providing strips of bacon for everyone, you could cut it into tiny pieces the night before and cook it over a slow fire until delicately brown. Drain off the fat and save for cooking the eggs in the morning. When ready to serve, just heat the bacon tidbits and sprinkle over the dish of scrambled eggs.

Can you tell me where I can buy doll heads? I prefer the rubber doll heads, but if they aren't obtainable I would like to have plastic or composition ones.

J. P.

There is a doll hospital at 1009 19th st. nw. which sells plastic and composition heads, but no rubber ones. When you order, give a thorough description of the doll, including its length with the old head, if possible, and the name of the manufacturer.

What type pattern would be used for a piece of white rayon material which has a deep border on each side, that can only be used with the selvage down as there are figures of people in the border? There are four yards of goods in the piece, 42 inches wide, and I take size 16 pattern. I have looked every place for a suitable pattern with no luck.

E. E. W.

Since the material has border on both edges, the most effective way to use it would be to split it down the center lengthwise so that the two borders are separated. Now, use one border for the bottom of a full peasant type skirt, combining it with plain white rayon material in a weave which matches as nearly as possible the material in the border. This way, the upper part of the skirt and possibly the entire waist of the dress would be plain white. If the pattern in the border can be cut to a short sleeve length without destroying the beauty of the design, you can use the border for the sleeves. If the border cannot be cut attractively, perhaps you can use some of the motifs for applique on the sleeves, around the neckline, etc. The color and design of the border should be repeated in some way in the upper part of the dress. Using it this way, you will not need all of the bordered material for one dress. To make it, choose a pattern for a dress with a full skirt and simple fitted waist and sleeves.

Buy Lot Now, Build Later Is Theme

By Conrad P. Harness

THE desire for a "home away from home" is again luring hundreds of Washington residents each weekend to inspect nearby Chesapeake Bay and river subdivisions.

Although the sales season for waterfront properties doesn't usually get into full swing until the first Washington heat wave, several brokers stated this week that sales activity was booming.

Leon Akerman, a beach developer for many years, reported yesterday that crowds inspecting his newly opened Cape St. Claire, near Annapolis, were so large that two policemen were required to direct traffic. Fifty salesmen couldn't handle the crowds, he added.

Inability to borrow construction money to finance home construction has not been a deterrent to lot purchasers. Most buyers say they plan to build "later on" when conditions are better.

CONSTRUCTION money has been a problem in all phases of the home building industry for the last 18 months. Banks in the Maryland Counties of Calvert and Anne Arundel are the main source of money loaned on beach homes. Few Washington institutions care to lend funds on homes to be erected outside of the Washington metropolitan area.

The various subdivisions up and down the bay attract the family which likes a vacation home, where mom and the kids can live all summer, with pop coming in for the weekends. There are many all-year homes in the area, however, whose occupants commute daily to Washington to work.

Most Chesapeake Bay realty salesmen admit their areas will offer little competition to Rehoboth, Del.; Ocean City, Md., and Colonial Beach, Va., in luring families with vacation money and two weeks to enjoy it. The nearby areas are not vacation resorts.

The few rental properties available in the area are usually snapped up for two-week periods as they come available. The average beach home, furnished, rents from $45 to $65 per week, will sleep six and is rented by the owner.

A few brokers in the larger beach communities have several homes listed by owners who may spend only a few summer weeks at the beach, renting their homes at other times.

Time Payment Plan

SEVERAL new subdivisions have been opened this year. One of the largest is Cape St. Claire, 5 miles from Annapolis near the Sandy Point Ferry. The 700-acre tract is 21 miles from Baltimore, 33 from Washington. Lot prices range from $250 for plots 60 by 150 feet near the water, to waterfront sites with private beach at $4000.

Purchase plans vary with each developer, but most beach lots may be purchased with one quarter to one third cash down, with up to two years to pay the balance.

An inspection of homes under way or built in the last two years along the bay reveals that most are in the $6500 to $10,000 class. Sun decks on the roof are popular, as are screened porches, barbeque pits and plenty of flowers. Septic tanks and wells must be planned as community facilities are a rarity.

Chesapeake Bay properties usually wear higher price tags than river waterfront lots, because, in most cases, they have better beaches, fishing, less danger to children in swimming and little fear of water pollution.

However, building of piers on the Chesapeake is by permission of the State only, while some riverfront properties carry riparian rights.

A Lustron all-steel model home at Bay Ridge, near Annapolis, was opened for public inspection yesterday. The Coland Co. of Washington is the distributor. It is expected to sell

F. Poche Waguespack, New Orleans realtor, this week urged Congress to exclude from law the requirement that realty firms must pay unemployment compensation taxes on their commission salesmen who are not eligible for benefits.

Testifying before the House Ways and Means Committee, he pointed out that the Nation's real estate firms already have paid over 200 million dollars in unemployment compensation taxes, although their salesmen are specifically prohibited from collecting compensation. He represented the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

The National Public Housing Conference will hold its eighteenth annual meeting on May 17-18 at the Hotel Statler, it was announced yesterday. Leading members of Congress and prominent housing officials will discuss housing problems facing the Nation.

Private Effort 'Death' Seen in Housing Bill

If the long-range housing bill becomes law, it will mean certain "destruction" of the private building industry in the field of rental housing, a realtor charged yesterday. The Senate has approved the proposed bill and the House is expected to act on it shortly.

Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, said up to 200,000 dwellings a year could be built under terms of the legislation. He termed the figure more than the amount of rental housing built by private builders in 1948, a record building year.

"Operators of socialized housing would be able to spend $2500 of public funds per room on their new construction," he added. "This is exclusive of land and utility installation costs. Under these terms, it has been estimated that total costs of a Government-built rental house can go as high as $15,000.

"Continuation of wartime rent control has discouraged normal investment in rental housing. This means that private construction of rental dwellings is confined largely to housing financed under FHA mortgage insurance. Private builders who construct rental housing under this financing are limited to a mortgage of $8100 per unit, including land and building.

"Success of the housing bill passed by the Senate means that there can be no private competition with the Government. It authorizes a volume of Government building equal to the entire national output of new rental housing production, and is gives public housing the tremendous advantage of being able to spend more per unit constructed, and to charge less in rent," he said.

Building Contracts Total $145,936,000

New York, April 30 (AP).—Engineering construction contracts awarded this week amount to $145,936,000, compared with $107,322,000 in the previous week and $183,253,000 a year ago, Engineering News-Record reported today.

Maryland Firms Announce Plans

At least three Maryland building firms this week announced extension of their building programs. All finished homes will sell under $15,000.

Colonial Construction Corp., 817 9th st. nw., will build 33 homes in Carroll Knolls section of Silver Spring, Md., for Bangar Development Co., owners.

Dwellings will be small brick bungalows measuring 35 by 32, with full basements. Two floor plans will be used—one with two bedrooms, the other three bedrooms. The 2-bedroom model will have a dining room and builtin china closet.

A sample home on Dexter avenue is expected to be opened soon. Forty-eight other homes are already under way in the subdivision, in addition to the newly announced 33. The homes are expected to sell between $14,000 and $14,500.

Queens Chapel, Inc., has been issued construction permits for 15 two-story frame homes in the 7500 block of Hawthorne st., in Kentland, Md. Hamilton Construction Co. of Hyattsville, is the builder. Sub-bids are now being taken from subcontractors.

The 2700 block of Arcola ave., Wheaton Hills, Md., is the site of 12 homes to be erected by Security Dwelling Corp. The same firm built 18 two-story homes in the area last year.

A company spokesman said the new houses would be three-bedroom bungalows, of brick construction, with a living room fireplace, full basements and other features. Final prices have not been set, but are expected to be near $12,500.

Cost of Softening Ton of Water Put at Five Cents

The cost of softening a ton of water is about 5 cents, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau. In contrast, savings in soap used in washing fabrics for a family of four in soft water can be as high as 75 per cent the Bureau added.

The life of fabrics washed in hard water is reduced about 25 per cent, the replacement cost is, on a yearly average $40.99. Tests have shown that 12.5 times as much soap is needed to raise washing lathers. With soft water, $26.56 could be saved every year on soap alone in the family of four.

Hard water also increases the cost of operating the household plumbing and heating system, according to the bureau.

Calvert Manor

A planned and restricted water front community ten miles from the District of Columbia line, South of Washington, via the South Capitol Street bridge under construction and the new Federal Highway to Indian Head, Md., in Prince Georges County.
A year round place in which to live where you can occupy the long weekends by improving your property, boating and fishing. Protective restrictions are in force to assure stable values and conditions. Many of the one-half acre or more building sites command the beautiful marine and land views for which this tributary of the Potomac is noted. All tracts have shore rights on Manor Park, a beautiful point in vew of Mt. Vernon that is dedicated for this purpose. A boat basin of 5' depth at low tide has been provided for Calvert Manor boatsmen and a substantial pier is now under construction.
The high North and South elevation of the Piscataway valley compels planes to fly well above this area, this is something to be taken into consideration in selecting a home location in this air age. The third and last section now being surveyed, contains beautiful scenic elevations up to 180 feet above tide water.
A reasonable price range consistent with the cost of developing the property will be maintained.

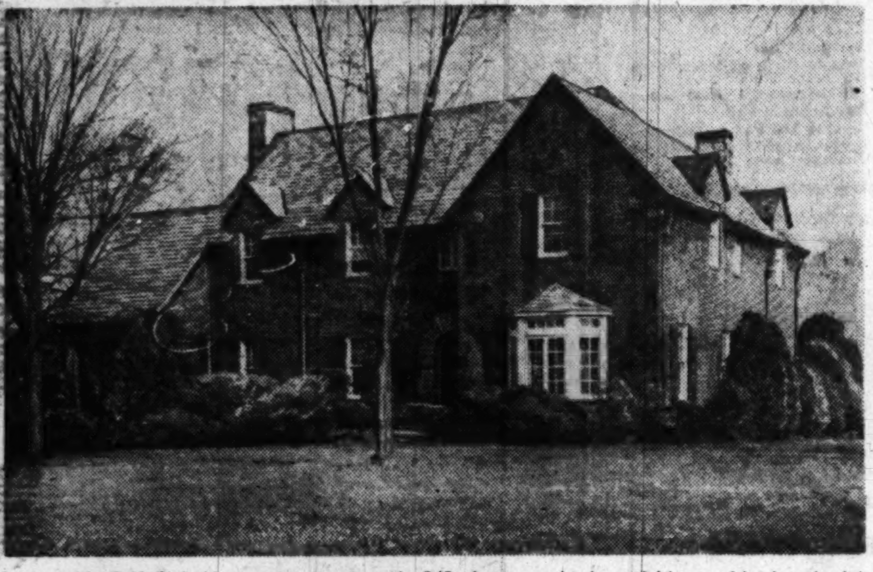
NEAR WASHINGTON GOLF & COUNTRY CLUB



In desirable Golf Club Manor, on approximately 2/3 of an acre, this beautiful home of brick and solid stone construction presents one of the first estates in the country club area.
Situated on a gently sloping hilltop, the masive architectural design of this home is perfectly offset by the gorgeous old trees and beautifully landscaped grounds.
A ten-foot center hall leads to the spacious living room (20x22), that opens upon a delightful screened porch (12x20), having two entrances leading to the gardens. The large wood-burning fireplace in the living room is most attractively designed, quite in keeping with the attention to detail that distinguishes this lovely home.
French doors at the right of the center hall lead to the spacious dining room (15x20), which is offset by a charming bay window and an intriguing breakfast room that also has an entrance to the bright, roomy kitchen (11x15), completely equipped with range and refrigerator, double sink, ample cabinets and serving counters. There is also a good sized storage pantry. A powder room, guest closet and open rear porch complete the first floor.
The beautiful open stairway leads to a delightful upstairs sitting room, and three unusually large bedrooms, two of them about 15 feet square, with adjoining tiled bath, and the master bedroom (15x20), with its private tiled bath, wood-burning fireplace and master's wardrobe, in addition to twin cedar lined closets. All rooms have excellent exposures with a view of the lovely country club hills.
There is a storage attic, also a full basement with maid's room and bath, wine cellar and an attached 3-car garage. The heat is oil, vapor.
Rarely does one have an opportunity to obtain a home of this quality.
Priced at $45,000, this property will appeal to the most discriminating purchaser.

Silicones Rival Other Synthetic Materials

The new silicone resins and their enamels are establishing records for their heat-resistant qualities. Silicones originate from ordinary sand and, in some ways, out-rival the miracles of the other synthetics which the chemists have developed from coal, air and water. They have definitely established themselves in the field of electrical insulation and their use in the protective coatings field is just in its infancy.

Uniform Plumbing Code Set

A uniform national plumbing code is on the way, according to Plumbing and Heating Business, a trade paper. Arrangements are now being made for a conference of five national organizations at work on plumbing codes, called by the American Standards Association and the Department of Commerce.

Represented at the conference will be consumers, the Government, public health authorities, plumbing inspectors, building department officials, water works departments and utilities, engineers, labor, plumbing contractors and others.

The ideal of a national uniform plumbing code has been the goal of many of these groups for 50 years, Plumbing and Heating Business points out.

If the efforts of the various groups are successful in developing a national uniform plumbing code, the plumbing industry will be the first group in the building industry to achieve this objective.

More Showers Go Into Homes

New York (AP).—Fully 90 per cent of new urban homes today are equipped with shower baths, a survey of the nation's clay tile contractors shows.

A shower goes in over the tub in 80 per cent of new dwellings, and another 10 per cent are equipped with separate shower stalls, the survey says. By contrast, only 20 to 30 per cent of the homes built in the 1920's had showers.

Homebuyer's Guide

Here are questions that Government officials are called on most frequently to answer about housing problems of individual home seekers:

QUESTION—What are the location requirements?

ANSWER—Generally the property must be located in a neighborhood that makes provision for convenient transportation, nearby schools and parks, police and fire protection, and adequate utilities, such as electricity, gas, telephone service, water, etc.

QUESTION—Where do I apply for either an FHA-insured or a VA-guaranteed loan?

ANSWER—In the case of an FHA-insured loan, you can apply to any lending agency approved by the FHA—bank, building and loan association, savings and loan association, etc. You can contact the local FHA office and get a list of FHA approved lending institutions in that locality.

In the case of a VA-guaranteed loan, you can apply to any bank, savings and loan association, building and loan association, mortgage loan company or other private lender.

QUESTION—What special FHA assistance is available to veteran or nonveteran cooperative housing groups?

ANSWER—Veterans and nonveterans can secure liberal FHA insurance for construction loans as well as for permanent financing by forming a nonprofit housing corporation. Veteran groups may secure FHA-insured loans for as much as 95 per cent of cost (based on costs prevailing on December 31, 1947); and nonveteran groups may secure FHA-insured loans for as much as 90 per cent of the estimated value of the project.

QUESTION—Does the loan for the cooperative housing project cover only the actual dwelling units or can it take in streets, drainage, park and playground, shopping center and other facilities?

ANSWER—The project can include the community and commercial facilities that the FHA may consider adequate to serve it. Streets, utilities and similar facilities are properly included.

QUESTION—How do I go about organizing a cooperative housing corporation?

ANSWER—Check with the local FHA office for technical advice and assistance.

HOME buyers need not be confused by the growing controversy over a suitable ratio between the cost of the new home and the buyer, because it is possible for local lending institution personnel to judge individual cases and advise soundly, the United States Savings and Loan League has announced.

Suggesting to this year's buyers that they put all their cards on the table in seeking advice of a mortgage lender on how much they can afford, the league says that the family's standards of living and the standards of those with whom they associate cause wide variety in the suitable ratio.

Two and a half to three times the annual income used to be a pretty good rule of thumb for a suitable investment in a home, the league said. While some now feel that this is too large an undertaking for the average family in view of higher taxes and other changes in the character of the postwar economy, it is still a very good rule for the majority.

On the other hand, there are some families which could afford a home even more costly than that in relation to their incomes, especially where living habits have been frugal over generations.

"The one reliable guide, besides observance of the family's own budgetary habits over a period of months and thus determining how much the monthly payment on the house could reasonably be, is to seek the guidance of a savings association official or other lender in the vicinity," says the league.

"There is every reason why such men will give sound advice. They have nothing to gain by a borrower's undertaking too much of a loan in his home buying, and everything to lose by making a loan to a man so overburdened. Their experience has shown them what some families which have the will to acquire homes can do with comparatively small incomes and how little other families can afford because they are more interested in the other luxuries of living than in having a nice home."

The application of any yardstick like this is necessarily faulty when the very low incomes and the very high incomes are reached, the league added. Customarily families living on $3000 a year pay a greater portion of their incomes for shelter than those living on $10,000 a year. This variation comes into the picture when a suitable investment in a home by these respective types is contemplated.

Safeguarding the family's ability to meet its home-owning budget is further accomplished by choice of a neighborhood where families of the same general income bracket, and at the same stage of their economic life, are settling, the league said.

"Otherwise the urge to 'keep up with the Joneses' may wreck a perfectly good schedule of living within one's means while acquiring a home," it is pointed out.

Deep Freeze A 'Must' Say Homemakers

POINTS to Consider When Buying a Home Freezer:

SIZE. It is known that most people buy units that are too small. If all the frozen food is stored at home and the family is a food producer, 5 cubic feet of space per person is recommended.

INSULATION. Space requirements limit the amount of insulation which can be used in portable units. However, the minimum amount of good insulation should be 4 to 5 inches except possibly for the lid of chest-type freezers. An efficient vapor barrier is essential.

FREEZING CAPACITY. The freezing capacity for a given box under given conditions will depend on the size of the condensing unit. It is important to know how much unfrozen food may safely be put into the freezer at one time.

COSTS. The operating cost as well as the purchase price should be considered in making any decision about buying a unit.

'Sub-Sonic' Land Yacht Too Popular

Montclair, N. J., April 30.—John Pelissier has turned an old bus into a land luxury liner. The only trouble is, people keep trying to get on at bus stops.

A research engineer for a large bus company, Pelissier bought the vehicle at auction in 1945 when the company felt it was worn out. He overhauled it and partly traded it into a mobile home.

For instance, he swapped some plywood for a paint job, and some shrubbery from his home in Upper Montclair for a stove. He also bought war surplus cots from the Queen Elizabeth when it was reconverted from a troopship, and used the aluminum on the bus seats to build an ice box.

He garnished the vehicle with fluorescent lights and linoleum and was ready to go. The bus, which sleeps eight, was dubbed "sub-sonic"—slower than sound. It is considerably slower but holds its own in highway traffic and delivers 10 miles to the gallon of gas.

Sub-sonic has hauled its owners to Canada, the Thousand Islands, Luray Caverns, Niagara Falls and the Pocono Mountains, and one summer it was parked for three months in Beach Haven, a New Jersey seashore resort. In season, it takes parties of older folk to distant football games.

In Canada, says Pelissier, a passerby was so anxious to buy the vehicle that the trip was almost stalled. "We just couldn't get rid of him," he said.

Rubber Finishes

The unbleached blonde woods used in the manufacture of furniture these days include not only maple, light oak, aspen and birch, but a wide variety of exotic and unusual woods such as satinwood, myrtle burl, holly and avodire. The blonde treatment employs a transparent rubbed finish which is very effective in bringing out the natural pattern of the grain.

Here Are Painting Tips

Time to Recondition Summer Furniture

THE OUTDOORS is again coming into its own. With summer just around the corner and the garden promising a cool escape from household cares, it's high time to recondition summer furniture.

No matter how scratched and faded you find your present outdoor or summer furniture, as long as its basically sound, you can use it again this year. It may take a few hours, but a little elbow grease will make a great difference in your summer comfort and enjoyment.

METAL FURNITURE: If its original shiny coat of paint has begun to peel and crack and let rust stains show through a repainting job is not too difficult. Enamel paint with a synthetic resin base is excellent for painting wood or metal furniture used on the porch or out-of-doors. Here are the simple steps for repainting:

1. Remove rust by wiping with cotton waste or oilcloth dipped in kerosene.

2. Brush off any scale with wire brush, steel wool or coarse emery cloth.

3. Touch up any bare metal spots with a coat of metal primer.

4. Apply two coats of enamel, allowing plenty of time for drying between coats.

WROUGHT IRON: Wrought iron is made from the purest form of iron, and furniture made from it resists rust to a greater extent than do articles made of cast iron. However, a protective coat of liquid wax increases this natural resistance and makes work lighter. Rust stains should be rubbed with kerosene, then scoured with steel wool. If the rust is stubborn, let the kerosene remain on it long enough to soften it.

CHROMIUM PLATED: Tubular metal frames made of chromium-plated steel will resist rusting unless they are unduly exposed to salt air or severe weather. Daily dusting with a soft cloth is usually all that is necessary. Finger-prints can be rubbed off with a dry or lightly dampened soft cloth. Never use harsh scouring powders or steel wool.

Stainless steel tubing is highly resistant to corrosion. An occasional cleaning with mild scouring powder and water improves its appearance. Daily dusting is necessary. Do not use harsh abrasives or steel wool.

PLASTIC: A well-rubbed thin coat of wax may be used as a finish for furniture made of plastic material. Daily dusting plus an occasional cleansing with mild lukewarm soapsuds is all that is necessary to keep this type of furniture looking its best.

PAINTED: Wood or metal furniture that is finished with good quality washable paint is easy to care for. It must be dusted regularly with a clean, soft untreated duster, and occasionally it will benefit by damp dusting with a soft cloth wrung almost dry of clear, lukewarm water.

Excessive soil may be removed with mild scouring powder or with whiting cleaner or with a good commercial paint cleaner. The formula for whiting cleaner is as follows: Two tablespoons white soap flakes, 10 tablespoons lukewarm water, 1¼ cups whiting. Dissolve soap flakes in water. Cool until jellied. Stir in whiting. Apply with damp cloth or sponge.

WICKER: Use a paint sprayer or flow on enamel paint with a full brush. Never stroke back and forth. Do not allow paint to settle in cracks and crevices because it will always remain wet and gummy.

In painting porch or garden furniture, see that all surfaces are thoroughly clean, smooth and rust-free before you begin to apply the new coating

Railroad Fair For Chicago

Chicago (U.P.).—The Railroad Fair will open on Chicago's lake front for its second season next June 25.

The 60-acre exposition last year attracted 2,500,000 persons and the Nation's railroads are hoping for a larger attendance in 1949. Trees have been transplanted to make room for additional exhibits and parking space.

The gigantic pageant, "Wheels A-Rolling," will be reenacted this summer. The pageant depicts the development of American transportation from the country's earliest days.

One new attraction will be a San Francisco cable car which will climb the sloping Lake Michigan bank to the fair site, carrying sighseers.

Features of last year's fair which will be used again include a New Mexican pueblo village inhabited by living Indians, a dude ranch and rodeo, a replica of an old New Orleans courtyard and a life-size spouting modeled of "Old Faithful" Geyser from Yellowstone National Park.

William the Conqueror had established his authority as the mightiest lord in France by the time he was 24 years of age.

'Wheel Chair' Home Planned For 2d Time

The second "wheel chair" home to be built here with Government grants to World War II paraplegics is expected to start soon in the 1500 block of Girard st. ne.

The recipient was identified as a former Air Force officer stricken with polio while on duty in Italy. The proposed home will be of two stories, with living quarters for the veteran on the first floor, including a large bedroom with exercise facilities, special bath and porch.

Edward K. Feldman, Inc., will build the structure. The Veterans Administration will pay half of the expected $16,350 costs. $10,000 is the ceiling payable by the Government in such cases.

The local VA office has asked its legal department for a ruling to determine if it can pay, on a retroactive basis, $10,000 to a World War II paraplegic who purchased a $23,850 home in Takoma Park, Md., before the legislation was enacted.

Push-Button Heat

Eighty per cent of the estimated 800,000 new homes to be built in the United States this year will have automatically-controlled heating plants, according to Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co.

Paris Apartments Really Hunted

Paris (AP).—The acute housing shortage continues to cast its shadow over Paris. When the Municipal Council adopted a resolution that the ashes of Honore de Balzac should be moved to the Pantheon on occasion of the hundredth anniversary of his death, one evening paper wistfully headlined the item: "Honore has found an apartment!"

Low-Cost Home Program Set For Germany

Frankfurt, April 30 (NYHT).—A program to popularize modern American low-cost construction methods in an effort to relieve Germany's acute housing shortage will be launched by Allied officials in the Ruhr.

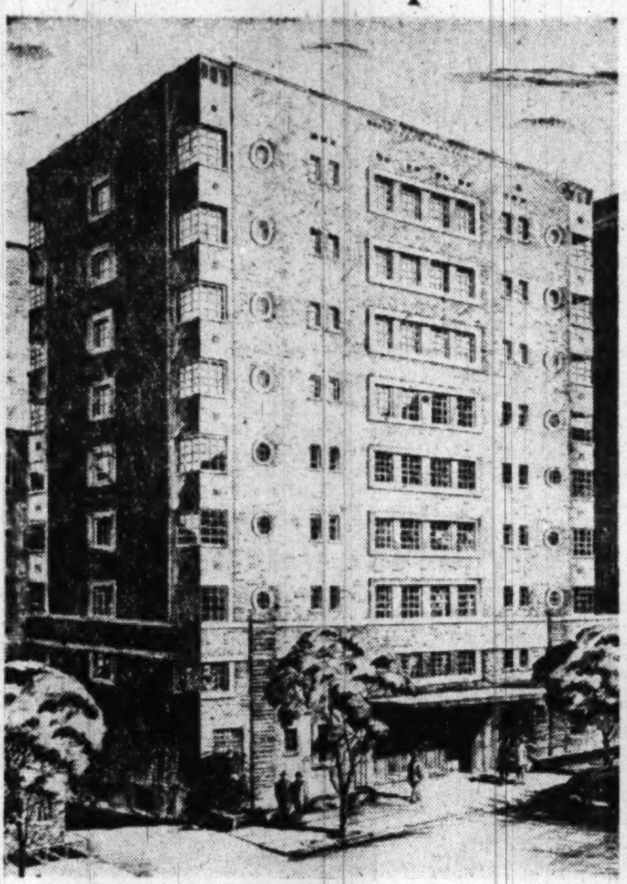
Next Tuesday at Essen, an American "tilt up" house—the concrete walls for which are poured on horizontal foundations and then raised into position—will be erected. This method will substantially lower costs and construction time will be reduced approximately 15 per cent over ordinary methods.

The American-British sponsored project carries the promise that the low-income German worker can build a home for approximately 25 per cent of his salary for a year. At present a permanent home costs almost twice that figure.

Behind the project to provide housing for millions of Germans who lost their homes during the war is a political maneuver to give private industry a shot in the arm against the growing threat of socialism.

There is a need of 40.000 housing units in the industrial Ruhr alone. Since the end of the war, the population of Western Germany has been boosted by almost 10 million refugees from Eastern Germany, Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

In Shadow of the Capitol



CONSTRUCTION is expected to commence soon on the proposed 8-story, 134 unit Capitol Plaza Apartments at 35 E st. nw., by Harry R. Loveless, owner. The structure will be thoroughly modern, fireproof, with a roof garden and recreation facilities for tenants. Ample garage space is included in plans by M. Mesrobian, architect. The project is financed under an FHA-insured loan placed by Boss & Phelps Mortgage Co. with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Boston. The building, when finished, will contain 112 efficiency units and 22-one-bedroom apartments

Boxcars End Housing Lack

Fort Hall, Idaho (U.P.).—The railroad "boxcar miracle" is easing the housing shortage in southern Idaho.

Homeless persons are buying abandoned boxcars at from $75 to $100. The weather-proof old cars are then transported to a home site.

A cement foundation makes them livable. Rail boxcars "homeowners" say the wheels have salvage value. It takes only a few hundred dollars to convert a boxcar to a home.

Bert Gay, who has lived in a remodeled boxcar near here since 1941, built his into a brick shingle structure. The car serves as the frame. Wallpaper can be put on the inside of the car.

Oil is obtained from the glossy leaves of the small trailing shrub, wintergreen.

Long Frozen Food Storage Requires Zero Temperatures

FOR long-time storage, all frozen food must be kept at zero Fahrenheit, or below. If you do not know how cold your home freezer or refrigerator freezing compartment is, it would be well to have the temperature checked by a reliable refrigeration service man. In this way you can be sure that your cabinet is maintaining the proper temperature.

It is possible to freeze and store foods in the same section of the home freezer. However, placing warm food against cold or frozen food is not good practice. The less the temperature of the stored food changes, the better the quality will be. Therefore, it is recommended that one section of the home freezer be used for freezing; storing the food, as soon as it becomes frozen, in the other sections of your freezer.

The amount of food that can be frozen is usually determined, after exhaustive tests, by the manfacturer. So follow the directions that come with every home freezer.

Freezing time varies for different foods, size of package, amount being frozen and whether the food is dry, sugar, syrup, or brine packed. Some foods freeze satisfactorily in a few hours. A good rule for freezing is to leave foods in contact with the freezing surface overnight.

The time to defrost your home freezer also varies. When heavy coatings of frost have formed on the interior of the freezing and storage compartment, it is time to defrost. The amount of frost varies in proportion to the use of the cabinet and climatic conditions which explains how impractical a given time for defrosting would be. You may find it necessary to defrost once a year, once in two years, or maybe more often.

Defrosting a home freezer is accomplished by scraping frost off the interior surface with a smooth, hard wooden paddle or fiber brush.

It is not done by melting it off as you do in your household refrigerator. If, during some season of the year you have very few packages in your freezer, you may wish to remove them and wrap them thoroughly to prevent thawing, cut off the current, and give your home freezer a thorough cleaning. However, this is rarely necessary if the frost is brushed or scraped off and not allowed to accumulate.

Novel Home Attracts 600 In Bethesda

A crowd of over 600 persons interested in 1949 model custom-built homes inspected a novel new home last week in Bethesda.

The developer, R. Bates Warren, said he planned to continue construction of similar type contempary-styled homes in the area. The residence, at 9115 Burning Tree rd., Bradley Hills Grove, is a $40,000 basementless rambler with several architectural features seldom seen in custom-built residences.

The exterior is of beveled side blocks, painted white, giving the appearance of wooden clapboard siding. The sleeping area has been isolated from the living area to insure quietness.

Designed and built by J. E. Hines, the floor plan includes two bed rooms, two baths, den, living room, dining room, kitchen, breakfast room with built-in leather seats for five persons and a utility room. A screened porch parallels the rear of the house, equipped with a built-in grill and oven for outdoor dining.

Heating is by radiant piping in the concrete floor, with individual regulators for each room. There is a large picture room in each major room. One feature seldom seen nowadays is a 2-story, 2-car garage with an unfinished upstairs.

Warren said the upper part of the garage could be finished off for $2500 into a separate apartment. He has been developing the 350-acre Bradley Hills Grove since 1938 and has built 40 homes for individual owners in the area.

Push Button Heat

Approximately 80 per cent of the 800,000 new homes to be built in the United States in 1949 will have automatically - controlled heating systems, according to the Oil Heat Institute.

A Tip on Whitewash

Lime paste for whitewashing should be prepared several days in advance of its use.

Building Industry Urges Passage Of Private Housing Legislation

The National Association of Home Builders yesterday warned its 15,000 members over the Nation that passage of certain long-range housing legislation now before Congress may mean end of freedom for private builders.

The association's "Washington Letter" of April 29 accused the Government of delaying tactics designed to cut volume of private housing in order to show Congress that the housing industry should be socialized.

The association said the tactics must be working since the spring building season has passed and volume is down substantially. Last year's production goal cannot be matched, the newletter added.

Members, which NAHB said erected 80 per cent of the urban housing in the United States, were urged to contact their Congressmen and tell them the facts. Knowledge from practical, informed men, such as NAHB members, the newsletter stated, should carry more influence with Congress "than the current flood of propaganda from uninformed, misguided pressure groups."

NAHB is seeking passage of S. 712, a bill to aid private enterprise in solving housing shortages. The building group is firmly opposed to the long range housing bill recently passed by the Senate and now up for study by the House Banking and Currency Committee. NAHB terms this bill 'Socialistic" and claims it will put private builders out of business because they will be unable to compete with the Government.

Rodney S. Lockwood of Detroit, president, NAHB, is scheduled to testify Monday before the House Committee in opposition to the housing bill. Other representatives of construction industry groups are expected to be heard during the balance of the week.

Informed sources predict the bill will undergo many changes when it comes to the House for final vote. Amendments to limit the number of public housing units to be erected are expected to be introduced.

Community Center Planned in Maryland

Plans are in progress for construction of the proposed Jewish Community Center, off East-West Highway in Silver Spring. The owner is the Montgomery County Jewish Committee. Norman Kertzman and Max Barth are architects.

The proposed structure will be two stories, with no basement, of brick and cinder block construction, measuring approximately 160 by 55 feet. The owners are expected to take general bids sometime after June 1.

Entire City Up for Sale In England

London April 30, (AP).—The Duchy of Cornwall, hereditary estate of the eldest son of the King of England, is offering to sell a whole town. It is Hugh Town, capital of the Scilly Islands, which lie at the entrance of the English Channel about 25 miles from Land's End.

Chiefly consisting of one long street, Hugh Town has 2 banks, 3 hotels, 15 shops, 160 dwelling houses, a town hall, postoffice and a Roman Catholic Church. All are for sale.

The duchy, sole landlord of all the island group's 1700 inhabitants, offered the property for sale so that the local council can have greater freedom in administering legislation, a spokesman explained. Present tenants will be given first opportunity to buy the properties.

The duchy—which now consists of about 135,000 acres scattered throughout southern England—was instituted by Edward 3d in 1337 for the support of his eldest son, Edward the Black Prince. Since then the eldest son of the Sovereign has inherited the dukedom.

Current revenue of the duchy amounts to about $350,000 a year. Since King George has no son, this now goes to the crown.

On the accession to the throne of Princess Elizabeth, her son, Prince Charles, would automatically inherit the dukedom and receive its revenues.

Maryland Sets Pace Settling DPs By State Organization

Baltimore (U.P.).—Maryland is the pace-setter in the organization of State machinery for the resettlement of displaced Europeans.

First to establish a State-wide system, Maryland has been at work for several months on a plan designed primarily to place refugees on farms, where help is badly needed.

Already the Maryland Committee for the Resettlement of Displaced Persons has provided a new and secure life in agriculture for nearly 200 European families. Three hundred more placements are in process.

Long before Congress passed the displaced persons act, William F. Laukaitis, supreme president of the Lithuanian Alliance of America, was helping refugees get to America from the refugee camps of Europe.

Laukaitis, a Baltimore attorney, kept a close eye on resettlement legislation in Congress and when the displaced persons act was passed he went to Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., with a plan of cooperation between the alliance and the State.

Laukaitis, a former chief judge of the Baltimore Traffic Court, selected from civic and professional groups a committee membership representing all the ethnic groups among the refugees with whom they would be dealing with.

The committee decided from the outset to concern itself mainly with the field of agriculture because in Maryland there's a dearth of farm help and because farm workers were given 30 per cent preference under the act.

When he applies to the committee for help, a farmer sets forth a detailed description of his housing and farm facilities. He tells how many persons he wants, whether he has any objection to children and whether he has a racial or religious preference. He also assures the committee he will pay the "prevailing wage."

Laukaitis meets each group of refugees upon their arrival in New York.

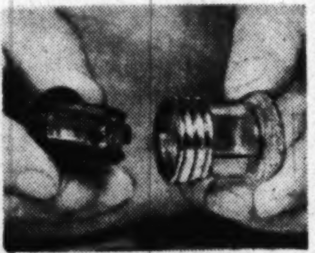
Product Previews

Making an all-weather enclosure out of an open porch is feasible, through the development of properly engineered fitting pieces and by using metal combination storm window and screen units. This particular porch was enclosed by the Chamberlin Co. of America. The all-metal combination storm window and screen units, in conjunction with a combination door and newly developed fitting piece assemblies, provide the key for turning an open porch into an all-weather living room.

Lumite is one of the newest developments in the plastic field. Because of its rustproof, stainproof qualities, Lumite screening can be left on windows, doors and porches all year if desired. Evidence of its strength is shown in the above photograph. Since it does not rust, the screening needs no painting. The mesh is easily washed with a damp cloth and is also non-inflammable. It is sold through hardware dealers, building supply and lumber dealers and department stores.



A new type fuse, which has five fuse links instead of one, has been developed by the H-R Electric Co. of Dearborn, Mich. The homeowner has a new fuse by a simple twist of the wrist. The plug consists of two sections—a permanent outer glass shell, plus a replaceable inner unit containing the links. Rotation of the glass shell brings a new link into use. The manufacturer said retail outlets in the Washington area have not yet been established.

A substantial increase in rentable area of major office buildings will be made possible through use of permalite, a new lightweight concrete and plaster aggregate, an official of the Great Lakes Carbon Corp. told over 100 architects and structural engineers in New York last week.

John H. Moorhead, of the corporation's building products division, estimated that steel-reinforced 4-inch lightweight concrete blocks in place of the conventional 8-inch curtain wall backing would have produced possible additional income of $40,000 per year in the office building at 100 Park ave., New York, now under construction.

A new method of storing paint brushes promises to eliminate cleaning, storing and recleaning before time to paint again. Called "Brushaway," the device is a simple plastic bag in which the brush is placed, an elastic band at the top of the bag is tightened—and the brush is held in an air and liquid-tight container. A loop at the top of the plastic "envelope" is used to suspend the brush to prevent spreading of the bristles. Distributed here by Barber & Ross Co., 5th and V sts. ne.

Knotty Pine Bookcase

EVER find a bookcase that wasn't filled? And usually with more gadgets than books so that mother's half-finished novel-of-the-month selection is buried under yesterday's newspapers and a pile of old Geographics.

So you need another bookcase. Try building this one yourself. It's easy and it makes a dandy piece of occasional furniture, too.

The Western Pine Association, 510 Yeon Building, Portland 4, Oreg., has a simple instruction sheet with detailed instruction on how to build one of knotty pine. They even tell you how to give it a finish treatment. It's available free by simply writing to the association and asking for Instruction Sheet No. 10.

Treat Before Painting

Before painting, new galvanized metal surfaces need to be brushed with a special solution. This can be a fairly strong vinegar solution, a solution made up of eight ounces of copper acetate, of copper chloride or copper sulphate in a gallon of water. There are also solutions manufactured especially for the purpose which are available at paint stores.

Let's Get Down to Earth!

May 1 Is Safe Planting Date Here for Beans

By James H. Beattie

Beans require little space and give a large return. Almost any soil produce a good crop

BEANS, especially the snap varieties, are among the most profitable of home garden crops. They require little space for a large return and almost any soil will produce a good crop. This vegetable is especially desirable for small gardens where space must be used to the best advantage.

All types of garden beans are warm-weather crops. This is especially true of lima beans and there is a general tendency to plant beans too early. The weather and the condition of the soil rather than a specific date is the best guide for planting beans.

Snap beans may be safely planted in the Washington area about May 1. The suggested date is for average soil and other conditions. In many cases such as with light-textured soil in a protected location it is often possible to plant as much as 10 days ahead of the usual date. This involves some chance of the loss of the seed and labor but for home garden plantings the risk is not too great.

This article has been timed to appear at about the right date for planting snap beans. Lima beans are somewhat more tender and they should not be planted until the weather is thoroughly settled, usually about May 10 in this area.

Succession Plantings

MEDIUM-SIZED plantings of bush snap beans made at two-week intervals will insure a constant supply of tender pods. This may be continued from the time that the earliest plantings are made until about the middle of August. Only 50 to 60 days are required for crop maturity and mid-August planting in and around Washington allows time for development before frost

Pole snap beans bear over a longer period and two plantings, one early, the other a few weeks later, are usually sufficient to insure a supply for the growing season. This necessitates rigid control pleasures for the Mexican bean-beetle.

Lima beans, both bush and pole kinds, are relatively long-season plants. Many gardeners make two plantings of the bush sorts, one at the beginning of the season, the other a month later, but only a single planting of the pole sorts is usually made. Late planted pole limas seldom produce a maximum crop before killed by frost.

Simple Soil Requirements

SOIL of moderate fertility and plenty of sunshine meets the requirements very nicely. Many follow the excellent practice of using the less fertile portions of the garden for beans. Too-rich soil and over-feeding are liable to cause excessive plant growth and failure of the plants to set pods.

Best results often come from using very light applications of commercial fertilizer having a low proportion of nitrogen. Two or three ounces of superphosphate worked into each bean hill, or foot of row while the soil is being preconsider it advisable to dispose of all their real estate holdings at this time. This real estate consists principally of vacant land in about fifty parcels totaling approximately fifteen hundred acres. It is largely located south of Bryn Mawr and extends from a point ten miles west of the center of Philadelphia into the Bryn Mawr, Broomall, Edgemont and Radnor Hunt districts of Delaware and Chester counties, Pennsylvania.

THE MANAGERS FOR

These properties comprise some of the most beautiful areas in the eastern part of this country. They have been cleared and groomed for the past twenty years to a clean and park-like development. Most of this land is ripe for immediate development.

This decision presents a rare opportunity to builders, investors, and brokers, and represents a realistic attitude in the prices which will be accepted for sale. Sales will be made in bulk acreage units only, which presently range upward from eight acres and average twenty to sixty-five acres.

Florida land of these Interests is included in the sale plans.

Co-operation of brokers is invited on a full commission

pared for planting is a desirable practice.

Beans are injured by too much lime. Both potatoes and beans are not adapted to heavily limed garden soils. Washington area soils are commonly deficient in magnesium and this may be safely supplied by using 40 to 50 pounds of ground dolomitic limestone to each 1000 square feet of surface. This, too, should be worked into the soil before the beans are planted.

The use of Epsom salts applied in solution to the plants and the surrounding soil provides a convenient method for supplying magnesium. A few ounces of the material dissolved in a gallon of water may be easily applied by using a watering can.

Excellent Bean Varieties

HERE are a few suggestions: Bush green-podded snapbeans—Stringless Green-Pod, Tendergreen, Rival, Ranger.

Bush wax-podded sorts—Puregold, Brittle Wax, Pencil Pod Wax.

Pole snapbeans—White-seeded Rust Resistant Kentucky Wonder, Kentucky Wonder Wax.

Bush lima varieties—Burpee's Fordhook, Fordhook 242, Triumph, Peerless. The last three are creations of the Department of Agriculture and seed is not always available from many seedsmen. The department has no seed for distribution.

Pole limas—King of the Garden, Burpee's Best, Carolina or Sieva, also known as the butter bean.

Vegetable growers are deeply indebted to plant breeders and seedsmen for the tremendous improvement that has been made in developing varieties of beans of superior quality. Freedom from stringiness, superior quality for canning and freezing and resistance to disease, particularly mosaic are among the noteworthy accomplishments.

Planting, Culture Simple

THE well-planned garden has various early short season plants including peas, radishes, spinach, lettuce, bush beans and others grouped together. Because of the short growth period of the bush snap beans they definitely belong in this grouping. Soil preparation for beans follows the usual methods and a fine seed-bed that is free from lumpiness is very desirable.

Bush snap beans may be grown in rows from 24 to 28 inches apart with the plants 2 to 3 inches apart in the rows or in rows of the same width with the plants in hills, two to three to each hill. The hills are spaced a foot to a foot and a half apart.

The hill method simplifies cultivation and dusting or spraying. Bush limas need a little more room in the rows with the plants spaced 4 to 5 inches apart. Pole beans require more room at least 36 inches between the hills being required. Pole beans grown on a trellis or a fence where they receive plenty of light may be spaced closer together, usually with the hills about 2 feet apart. For trellis culture single plants spaced about a foot apart is a common and satisfactory method of culture.

Recommended spacings for beans are given in terms of the number of plants in the final stand but it should be remembered that bean seed never germinates and it is usually safe to plant about twice the number of seeds that are theoretically needed. The principal precaution is avoided covering the seeds too deeply—an inch is usually enough, and in the case of heavy soil to cover the seeds with sand, or some other material that will not harden and prevent the plants from coming up.

Mexican Beetle Is Enemy

CONSTANT progress is being made by plant breeders and seedmen in developing varieties of beans that are resistant to mosaic and other diseases. Rival and Puregold are excellent illustrations. In the Washington area the Mexican bean-beetle is undoubtedly the worst pest affecting this vegetable. Its control is not difficult provided early and regular control measures are practiced.

DDT is not effective against this insect and both Paris green and lead arsenate are injurious to bean plants. Cryolite, an effective treatment for the insect, should not be used after the pods form. With limas or other beans that are shelled before use this objection to cryolite is not important. Spraying or dusting with rotenone at regular intervals of every 10 days, taking care to cover the underside of the leaves is a very satisfactory and effective manner for controlling this insect.

Bean plants that have become badly infested with the beetle should be destroyed and not left as a breeding place for the insect. If left adjacent to later succession plantings abandoned early crop beans are liable to make the problem of control a difficult one.

Garden Notes

The Avondale Garden Club will hold its first benefit Flower Mart on May 13, from 9 a. m. to 8 p. m. on the grounds in front of the Avondale branch of the Citizens Bank of Riverdale. Many lovely plants will be offered for sale. Other booths will feature novelties for children, with refreshments, homemade cakes and cookies.

The plant auction held last year by the Woodridge Garden Club was such a success that another has been set for Tuesday at Sherwood Hall, 22nd and Rhode Island ave. ne. Plants, bulbs and other horticultuaral material will be sold by L. M. Clarke, auctioneer. Several members will discuss what varieties do best in this area and where they may be obtained.

The District of Columbia Branch of the National Association of Gardeners will hold its regular monthly meeting next Friday at Dumbarton Oaks, 3245 S st. nw. Dr. Leonard W. Kiphart, of the Department of Agriculture, will discuss "Chemicals for Weed Eradication."

The Garden Club of Chevy Chase, Md., will meet Wednesday at 3 p. m. at the home of Mrs. Robert Ash, 8921 Bradley blvd., Md. Mrs. Ash will be assisted by Mrs. John G. Rouse. Frederick Lee will discuss "Plant That Grow in the Shade."

Early spring is the best season for setting asparagus crowns. Once established this superior vegetable will yield for an indefinite period and few plants yield a greater return for the investment. It thrives to perfection in the Washington area and the plant should be in tens of thousands of Washington gardens. Twenty-five plants set in a 50-foot row, once well established, will provide a surprising lot of asparagus. It is one of the best of the vegetables for freezing.

Be sure to dig the row-site deeply and fill in with a mixture of compost, commercial fertilizer and topsoil. Set the crowns about 8 inches below the natural surface, cover lightly and gradually fill in around them as growth preceeds. The Mary Washington rust resistant variety is very widely used.

Dahlia bulbs should be examined from time to time, particularly noting any tendency to drying out and shriveling. If packed in sawdust, vermiculite or some other similar material and stored in a cool place, there should be little danger from shriveling. Light sprinkling should counteract unfavorable conditions of this kind. It is none to early to place dahlia clumps in soil in the hot-bed or the greenhouse for the starting of cuttings.

CORN may be planted around May 1-15 most places, but don't plant it all at once. Make several plantings and of several varieties so that it will ripen at different times. Golden Cross bantam and North Star are two of the best of the new hybrid sorts. There are earlier and later varieties of hybrid sweet corns if you have room for them. These may be found in any leading seed catalogue or seed store.

THE ADDITION OF SOME NEW SHRUBS, fruit trees, evergreens, vines, roses or perennial plants such as phlox, day lilies and delphinium will do much to pep up a garden. Better wait until late summer to plant irises, peonies, lilies and the spring bulbs.

FERTILIZING YOUR SHRUBS, LAWN, TREES AND FLOWER BORDERS. This will make all the difference in the world in their growth, appearance and productiveness. Buy a good complete plant food and use according to directions. Lime is also beneficial, but not on the acid-loving plants.

Tulips in Bloom At Walter Reed

Aerial Reseeding of Land In Arizona Termed Failure

Tucson, Ariz., April 30 (AP).—Reseeding barren lands by airplane in Arizona has not been successful, Government officials state.

They say billions of seeds sprayed from the air in pellets have failed to produce hoped-for growths of grass. In one of the experiments not a single specimen of the grass sown could be found. In another, "the results cannot be considered even partially satisfactory."

A report on airplane pellet seeding on four Indian reservations in Arizona has been prepared by Joe A. Wagner, range supervisor of the Papago Indian agency at Sells, Ariz. It was presented to the southwestern section, Society of American Foresters, in Tucson.

A total of 90,000 acres on the reservations were seeded. They were the Navajo in northeastern Arizona and northwestern New Mexico; Hopi, in northeastern Arizona; Papago in the south central; and San Carlos in east central Arizona.

The pellets were made of clay from the ground to be treated, seed, rodent-insect repellent and growth-promoting chemicals. It hoped the force of the pellets striking the ground would cause them to become imbedded. It didn't. Penetration was practically nil, Wagner said.

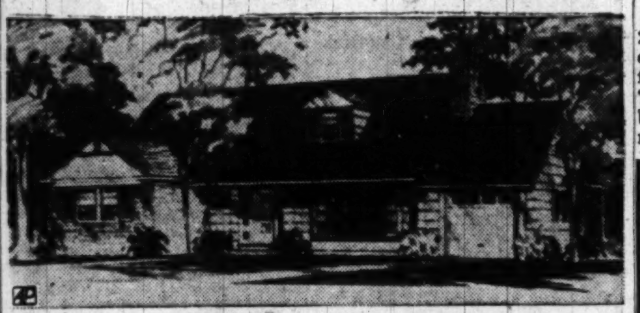
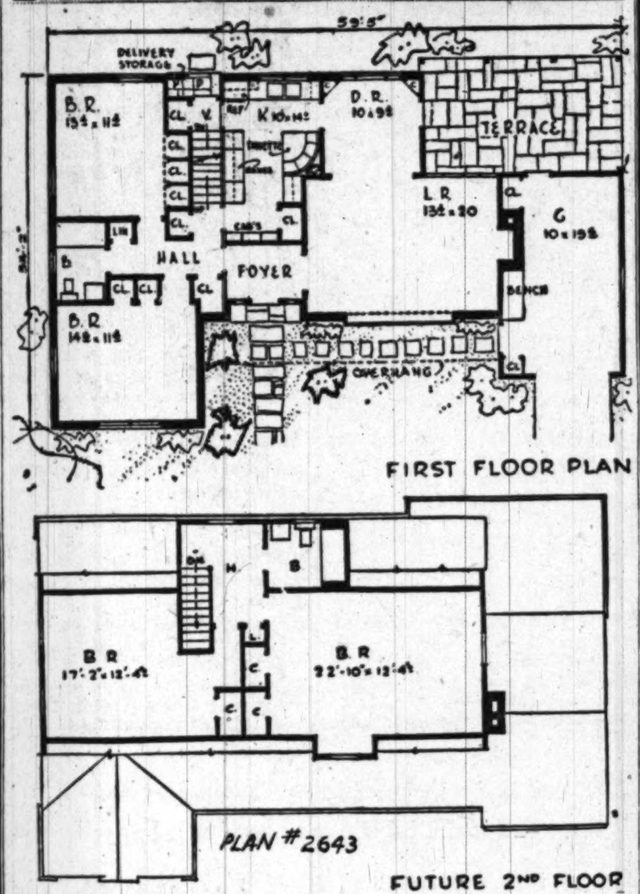
The People's Choice





DESIGNED TO SATISFY most criticisms of house plans, this layout was inspired by a survey of a series of plans. The study showed that 39 per cent had no vestibule to keep the cold and rain out of the living room; 45 per cent had no rear vestibule off the kitchen; 48 per cent had no rain protection over front door; 39 per cent used the living room as a corridor from ktchn to bedrooms; 61 per cent had insufficient closet space; 35 per cent had no direct access to basement from outdoors. Architect Rudolph A. Matern, 90-94 161st st., Jamaica 2, N. Y., designed this Plan 2643 to meet those objections. The house covers 1208 square feet without garage

Weeder's Guide

Stand Up, Take It Easy, In Garden

Hoeing is a good way to develop correct posture

THE easier you take the job of cultivating, the better it is for your plants. A lazy gardener will never wait until the weeds grow big enough to see; it is so much easier to kill them in the sprout stage, by stirring the soil before they come to the surface.

This stirring should be done with a delicate touch; if you work hard at it, and dig deep, it will do more harm than good. Deep cultivating, which stirs the soil several inches deep, is definitely out for garden crops. Experiments have demonstrated that deeply stirred soil dries out faster, and that this form of cultivation, which is very hard work, is likely to disturb the roots of your vegetable plants, and do more harm than good.

The right way to cultivate is to keep far enough away from the vegetables so that you do not even disturb the roots that lie close to the surface, for these are the oldest roots and continue to play an important part in nourishing the plant, even when it grows large. And cultivate just deep enough—an inch or so—to break the soil crust and uproot the tiny white sprouts of weeds, which are just beginning to grow.

In normal times you might choose your cultivators from a great variety; some gardeners used to have as many cultivators as a golfer has clubs. Nowadays, you use what you can get, and it is good to know that the old-fashioned goose-neck hoe is a most satisfactory tool for all cultivating tasks. If you need a hand cultivator, to use in the vegetable row or in small corners where a big hoe cannot function, then a putty knife makes a good one, if you cannot get a better.

Cultivate after every rain, when the soil has dried out enough to crumble. Begin cultivating as soon as your crops appear above the surface, and there is no reason why a weed should ever grow in your garden which requires to be pulled by hand. Except, of course, in the vegetable row itself. Here, a few hours' work on your knees, pulling up the weeds, usually when you are thinning out the crop, will usually clean up the rows for the entire season.

7-Store Shopping Center

A seven-store shopping center at 23rd and Congres ssts. se., will be erected by Jonathan Woodner Co. for the Shipley Corp., owners. The project will be one story and basement, of brick construction, measuring about 80 by 150 feet.

Good Weather Spurs Beach Sales

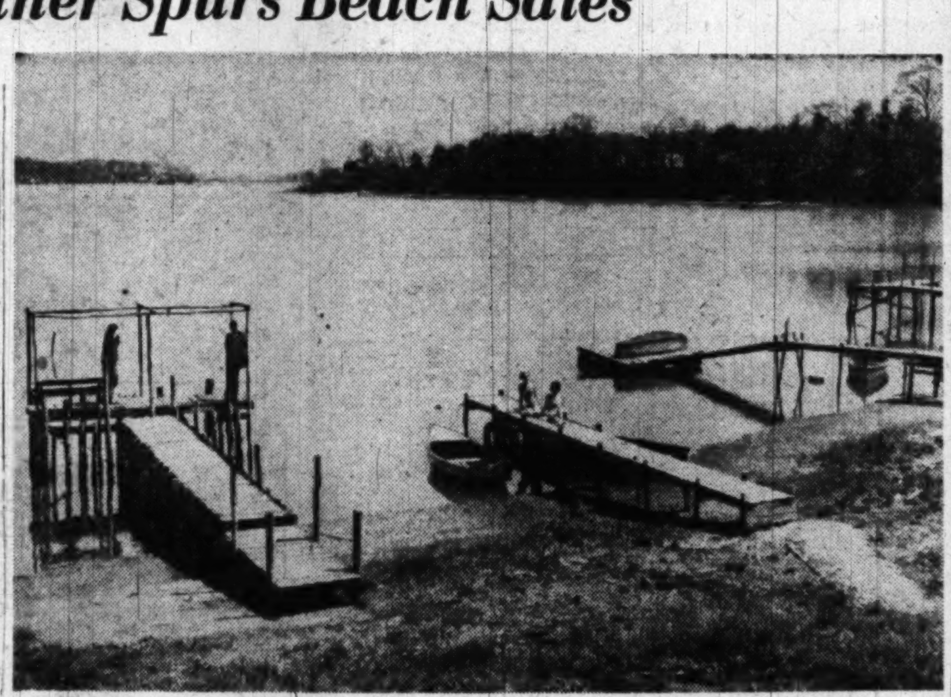
for under $10,000 on the owner's lot.

Detailed descriptions of some of the more noted beach and river projects follow:



The many wide rivers opening off the Chesapeake Bay in nearby Maryland offer exciting vacation home sites. Can't you just picture yourself in this scene at a South River subdivision? Most subdivisions have a community beach site for use by all lot owners

LOCH HAVEN: Located near the junction of South River and the bay, south of Annapolis. Has received a good reception from buyers since opening in 1946. Several hundred lots have been sold. A few new homes have been erected, mostly near the water. Developed by N. C. Hines & Son. The area is partly wooded, partly clear, with a good road network. A beach house has been added.

WILLOWS BEACH COLONY: Between Chesapeake Beach and Plum Point. Has three quarters of a mile fronting on the beach. Fourteen homes have been erected, mostly two-bedroom structures, costing around $7000 to $8000. Lots average around $1200 to $1500. Community facilities include beach club restricted to 150 families.

SAUNDERS POINT BEACH: On Chesapeake Bay at mouth of South River, where bay is over 10 miles wide. Owned and developed by Barse Stonebraker. Lots sell from $700 to $3500, are about one quarter acre each. As in most commercially developed projects, there are no riparian rights. A community beach serves all. Tract is 70 acres. A new roadway near the area will provide greater ease of transportation. All homes built must be approved by the developers, a safeguard against architectural monstrosities and shacks. Negotiations are underway for Shannon & Luchs and J. Garrett Beitzell to handle sales.

GLEN ISLE: Just opened by Leon Ackerman on South River, at Riva, Md. A mile of shore front for use of all property owners. Lots sell from $250 in rear areas to $2000 for water frontage. First section has been sold, with a new section to open this week.

CAPE ST. JOHN: Another Ackerman project—opened in 1948 on South River, off Riva, Md. Has 300 lots at $750 to $2000. Forty homes are expected to be built by individual owners when all roads are completed.

ST. MARY'S BEACH: On the south side of the Patuxent River near Oakville, about 45 miles from the District. Lots selling from $295 to $1500 by N. C. Hines & Son. There is a new beach house with lockers, showers and restaurant. A picnic park has tables, barbecue pits, fountain and playground equipment. About 130 lots sold, mostly to a middle-class buyer. Several homes are under way, all owner-financed, at costs from $5500 to $6500. A paved State road runs through the property to the waterfront. The Patuxent is 2½ miles at this point.

COBB ISLAND: On Neale Sound at the junction of the Wicomico and Potomac Rivers. Lots selling at $198 and up by Calvert Realty. Project has a land-locked sound, deep harbor, with water 8 miles wide at Cobb Island.

CALVERT MANOR: This is not a summer resort area, but rather a section of all-year-around homes on the Potomac. Area is 123 acres, first opened in 1948 by Theodore Menk, owner and developer. Located at junction of Piscataway Bay and Potomac River, about 10 miles from the District in Prince Georges County. Back lots start at $650, rise to $2500 for water frontage. Smallest lot is 20,000 square feet. Many tracts have been sold. Several families are building their own homes.

ROSE HAVEN. A stone's throw from North Beach, opened in 1947 by Joseph Rose, a North Beach businessman, it's one of the largest housing projects in the entire beach area, covering 366 acres. Has a 2-story yacht club. A yacht basin is planned to hold 400 boats.

CAPE LEONARD: Located on St. Leonard Creek, a large tributary of the Patuxent River, the gateway to the Chesapeake, midway between Solomons and Broomes Island. It was opened in September, 1946, has lots selling up to $3000. Cape Leonard Corp., developers, is a local concern located in the Bowen Building. Area offers plenty of sailing and deep waters. Electricity and phones are in, streets are built up. Several year-around homes of high caliber are completed. A community center is planned.

DRUM POINT: One of the largest land areas now being developed. Located about 5 miles from Solomons at the tip of Calvert County. Its sandy beaches served as amphibious training grounds for thousands of troops which later landed in Africa and Europe. Lot sizes range from one fourth to one half acre with price tags from $495 to $3000. Roads are in. Project offers 2½ miles of bay and river frontage, four large fresh water lakes and plenty of fishing. Owned by Drum Point Corp., a local firm.

HALLOWING POINT RIVER ESTATES: This project is newsworthy because it isn't a Maryland site—it's located on 527 acres about 4 miles by water below Mount Vernon, off the Gunston Hall rd., in Fairfax County, Va. It has about 2 miles of Potomac River frontage, with lots selling from $500 to $5000 for a 1½-acre site. Two private beaches and picnic area are reserved for owners of back lots. Chauncey & Clarke of Alexandria, are sales agents.

Town-Country House Moves With Weather

Morocco, Ind., April 30 (AP).—Every fall, as the weather turns stormy, Mrs. Helen Rasher, New York Central railroad station agent at Morocco, Ind., sets up her "town apartment." If roads are snowy or icy, Mrs. Rasher stays in town instead of driving home to Kentland a dozen miles away.

Setting up the town apartment is simple. Mrs. Rasher hooks up her 1948 trailer to her 1948 auto and drives to Morocco. There the trailer is parked on a convenient lot near the station. Hooked up to electricity, city water and sewers, the town house then is ready. Most of the time Mrs. Rasher commutes to Kentland to be with her family, but when the weather is stormy or threatening she lives in the trailer, avoiding any danger of being late to work, or snowbound away from the station. The trailer has four rooms. If the family comes to visit there are beds for six; two in the bedroom and four on convertible couches in the living room.

Comics and Movies Held Not Harmful

Chicago (U.P.).—Comic books and crime movies aren't responsible for anti-social behavior in children, a sociologist at Northwestern University maintains.

"There is a good deal of popular misunderstanding about the effect of movies on children's conduct," said Kimball Young, chairman of the sociology department at Northwestern. He said no adequate studies had been made but that there was "a lot of popular nonsense" about the serious effects of comic books.

"The neurotic or maladjusted child may be affected by the movies or comic books, not because of the entertainment but because of earlier training or lack of training in the family," Young said.

Sanitary Counters Needed in Kitchen

Battered and scarred counter tops are a potential health hazard in the kitchen since foods are so often prepared on them. One good idea is to have them resurfaced with clay tile for it is both sanitary and stainproof. Tiled counters also are long lasting and unaffected by moisture or dampness.

It's 'Old Friends' Week on the Screen

A FAVORITE almost as long as the movies have been your favorite entertainment, the late Wallace Beery this week will be seen at the Capitol in his final screen role, "Big Jack," a script that boasts the talents of Gene Fowler. Marjorie Main is the popular star's leading lady.

JOAN CRAWFORD started entertaining the public when she was a mere 16. Since that was over 20 years ago, Joan has now been a star for as long as the average moviegoer can remember, but this view of her in the Warner's current "Flamingo Road" proves that Joan is still on the sunny side of life, in fact sunnier than many of her current rivals. Somerset Maugham, right, has just announced his retirement from writing at the age of 75, a farewell he observes in "Quartet," a unique film from four of his short stories which arrives Wednesday at the Playhouse. Maugham appears in the picture to introduce his stories: "The Facts of Life," "The Alien Corn" and "The Colonel's Lady."

Write a Letter to Congress Now, Asking Return of Our Theater

By Richard L. Coe

YES, THERE IS something you can do about getting the living theater back to the Nation's Capital.

The man to put the pressure on now is Chairman William M. Whittington of the House Committee on Public Works.

Write him of your interest in the Celler bill, which is aimed to pry the Belasco Theater away from Government office space and back into its role as a playhouse.

Write him a brief, intelligent letter that includes your name and address.

DO NOT—repeat NOT—send him a mimeographed letter or make carbons for your friends to sign.

Congressmen have no use for letter campaigns in general; they can smell an artificial pressure group a mile off. A phony letter campaign means nothing to a Congressman. It only makes him mad.

But brief, intelligent letters properly signed make a decided impression on legislation pending before a committee. Since Washington is governed in a higgle-de-piggledy manner, in this matter Mississippi's Representative Whittington is the man to write.

In Committee

THE SITUATION of the Celler bill now is this:

Introduced on the floor, it was referred to the Committee on Public Works, of which Representative Whittington is chairman.

Chairman Whittington has requested information on the matter from the three Government agencies concerned: the Treasury Department, the Federal Works Administration and the Bureau of the Budget.

These reports are expected from the agencies shortly. When they are received, the committee will then set a day for hearings on the bill.

At the hearings appropriate authorities will testify on why a theater is needed in Washington. Should the committee approve the bill, it will then go to the floor for House approval.

Important those first steps are, but then, as in all bills, H.R. 3038 must then go to the Senate, where it will be referred to the corresponding committee and, ultimately, may come up for full Senate approval.

Though the Senate step may seem discouraging to face this early in the game, there's no reason to think it will be quite so lengthy a procedure as getting the bill through the House.

The present delay in getting the reports from the three governmental agencies will not be duplicated in the Senate procedure. The House record, these very steps that are now taking so much time, will make the route through the Senate far easier.

Willing to Amend

REPRESENTATIVE CELLER this week stated that he was willing, when his bill reaches the hearing stage, to amend it so as to make unnecessary any Federal expenditure. He feels that by extending the time the Government will agree not to use the property, producers will be willing to invest their money with some guarantee of amortizing their investment. Should the Government require the property, Representative Celler's projected amendment would guarantee that the Government make good the leasee's financial loss.

This proviso would effectively answer those who have criticized the Celler bill on the grounds that Federal money should not be used on the project.

It would also take away the limited time period of rental which last year defeated producers who proffered bids to rent the building. At that time the brief span of guaranteed rental time and the loss of heating equipment stood in the way of converting the old building.

Time Is Now Vital

ONE SERIOUS setback in getting the bill started on its way has been the delay of the three Government agencies in making their reports to the committee. They have had the requests now since early March and considering that each agency made similar reports only last year the delay seems shamefully excessive.

For, with the end of the congressional session at least being discussed, time is now vital to this minor, slight little bill.

But minor as it may be in regard to the weighty matters now before the Congress, it is the lawmakers' best chance of going on record that they, like many other concerned Americans, are embarrassed that their beautiful Capital is without a building that is taken for granted in all the other leading capitals of the earth.

So, though the road is yet a long one and though one hopes other solutions may be found for our theaterless state, the Celler bill is the focal point of the Citizens Committee for Theater in the Nation's Capital.

If you belong to groups, organizations, schools, churches, lodges, unions, citizens associations or any other unit, get it to act as a body to tell Chairman Whittington of your interest in getting theater back to Washington.

But at all events, write him yourself, a brief, PERSONAL letter indicating your interest.

May be some day again, when visitors from abroad come to our shining springtime city, one need not be ashamed when the stranger asks about Theater.

Tony Awards Given

NEW YORK, April 30.—The Antoinette Perry awards, promoting vitality and originality in the theater, this year were made in 12 categories, with "Death of a Salesman" maintaining its lead as the year's most admired play.

Cole Porter's musical, "Kiss Me, Kate," won another of the "Tonys," named for the late director and chosen by the American Theater Wing.

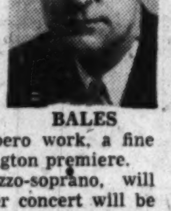
Martita Hunt was honored for her work in "The Madwoman of Chaillot," Rex Harrison for his in "Anne of the Thousand Days." Ray Bolger of "Where's Charley?" and Nanette Fabray of "Love Life" were the musical comedy winners. Arthur Kennedy, Shirley Booth, Jo Mielziner, Elia Kazan, Gower Champion and Lemuel Ayers were others awarded the silver medallion this week.

At National Gallery

Music Festival Begins Today

By Paul Hume

RICHARD BALES, director of music at the National Gallery of Art, presents the sixth annual festival of American music. Tonight's concert is the first of five to be heard in May.



BALES

As is now customary, there will be a string quartet evening, a song recital, a piano program, and two orchestral evenings. The Juilliard String Quartet, with deserved fame for their interpretation of contemporary music, plays tonight. They list quartets of William Schuman, Harold Shapero and Walter Piston. The Shapero work, a fine score, will have its Washington premiere.

Frances Lehnerts, mezzo-soprano, will give the song recital. Her concert will be distinguished by a group of seven American folk songs of varying origin. She has also chosen well from our modern song writers.

Margaret Tolson, resident pianist, has the honor of bringing forward American piano music. Miss Tolson deserves this spot in the light of her increasingly fine work in past years and her constant service to the native composer. She will play the Griffes sonata, as well as sonatas by Virgil Thomson and Ross Lee Finney. Carl Ruggles, Anthony Donata and Louise Talma will also be on her program. She will close the evening with Ray Green's Festival Fugues, of which she has given both Washington and New York premieres.

Important to Washington

OF TWO orchestral programs designed for the festival, one is of especial importance to Washington. Its contents have been written for this program by the Washington Composers Club and will be heard for the first time on the evening of May 8. The members of the club include Mary Howe, Eric Bovet, R. Deane Shure, Emerson Meyers, Alba Rosa Vietor, Dorothy Rad de Emery and La Salle Spier.

Each member of the club has contributed one work to the evening, which will be under the direction of Bales. Emerson Meyers will be soloist in his piano concertino, and Rex Hinshaw, clarinetist, will take the solo role in Spier's Journey With a Clarinet.

The final evening in the series will again be orchestral, with local premieres for a partita by Gardner Read, a Divertimento for strings by Jack Kilpatrick, a Brazilian suite by Radames Gnattali, Robert Ward's Night Music, Ray Green's Three Pieces for a Concert, and Frederick Woltmann's Songs From a Chinese Lute.

Henriette Bagger Plum, mezzo-soprano, will sing the Woltmann songs. Bales will conclude the series with his own orchestral version of a ballet suite he wrote two years ago, based on episodes in the life of Lincoln. Noel Smith will serve as narrator in this sequence.

MAY IS the month for festivals throughout the country. Cornell University is now in the midst of an extended celebration in all the arts, with music, drama, dance, writing, painting and sculpture mixing with architecture and films. Columbia University, in conjunction with Juilliard Institute, is preparing to open its annual American festival. The University of Michigan is famous for its Ann Arbor music every May. Writers Take Dead Aim At Schools

By John Crosby

NEW YORK, April 30 (NYHT.).

My ear, which never gets more than an inch or so off the ground, has detected a trend, a small trend (large trends deafen me). Writers, who behave in many ways like cultivated sheep, have decided in large numbers to light into the American school.

Two Broadway plays—"Goodbye, My Fancy," which is still running, and another defunct masterpiece whose name has escaped me—tore respectively into the college and the school. For unmitigated ferocity the leading contender against the trustees of American education is a new novel by John Horne Burns, the man who wrote "The Gallery," one of the best war novels of them all.

Offhand, I can't think why everyone started to light into the schools simultaneously, but it's a healthy sign. The British writers, the most educated animals on earth, have done it for generations. They resent the phenomenal grasp British schools give them on the weaknesses of their own society, something of which they'd be otherwise unaware. Naturally they're bitter against a system which spreads enlightenment at the expense of hope.

Ours the Same

OUR own writers, I suspect, are pretty much the same. The Mark Twain or school-of-hard-knocks writer is disappearing; the educated writer who has taken his place is infuriated at

Selznick Insists He's Only Bent

By Hedda Hopper

NEW YORK, April 30.—David Selznick is smiling at those rumors that he's broke. "I may be bent," he told me, "but I'm leaving for Europe around the middle of May and expect to coproduce four pictures abroad. The first will be 'Gone to Earth,' with Jennifer Jones."

Joseph Cotten, Valli and Gregory Peck all want to make more films in Europe; so they'll likely land in Selznick's future productions. David, who has the American rights for "Fallen Idol," won't release the picture until autumn. It's so good he wants to give it the best breaks possible at the box office. "Television," says he, "will certainly give pictures a great deal of competition. It will hit bad pictures hard, but people will always go to see good ones."

I've had no luck in locating Dr. Peter Lindstrom to get his viewpoint on those reports about his wife, Ingrid Bergman, and Rossellini. But I have learned that Ingrid bought a whole new wardrobe from Elizabeth Haas before going to Italy and that Rossellini was so interested in her appearance that he came to her fittings.

Ladies Day

PAUL HOLLISTER, whose fine work helped get all those awards for Walter Wanger's "Joan of Arc," took me to the Players for ladies' day. The club, which was the home of Edwin Booth, is open to women only once a year. John Sargent's portrait of Booth always draws the biggest crowd. What tragedy and knowledge are painted into that face! Standing before it during my visit was that wonderful actress Josephine Hull, who's taking an enforced vacation since "Harvey" closed. She reads and discards at least two bad plays a week.

At the party, I met C. E. Hooper, the famous pollster. Unlike his polls (sometimes), he's affable and likeable. His wife's a darling.

Walter Hampden, president of the Players, couldn't attend the shindig. He was rehearsing the club's annual play. This year it's "Macbeth" and goes on television. But the fathers of "Life with Mother," Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, were in the receiving line with Franklin P. Adams and Roy Atwell.

Around the Town

LUNCHED at the Colony with Pierre Dutel, the decorator. Elsa Maxwell, who's sailing for Europe at the end of May, was there with Mrs. William Randolph Hearst. Mrs. Irving Berlin had her usual table.

Saw Lilly Dache's collection of lovely clothes and came away with two hats that Maryland McCormick and Clare McLean have already tried to snatch. The Rex chapeau I gave Maryland last year went traveling. She wore it to the King's garden party in London, then gave it to Eva Peron while in Argentina.

Finally saw "Death of a Salesman," and I think the acting and direction are superior to the play. Eleanor, Elliott and Faye Roosevelt were in the audience. The betting here is 6 to 1 that Franklin, jr., will finish Sol Bloom's unexpired term in the House of Representatives. . . . Clark Gable has a rendezvous with Dolly O'Brien here within a few weeks. She'll fly up from Palm Beach. Kirk Douglas, after covering the town like a cloud, has returned to Hollywood. His appearances have paid off handsomely for "Champion." Our movie stars who won't cooperate with the press here are getting the business. They're finding that photographers and reporters will no longer cater to their moods.

Box Office Power

DURING Holy Week here, "The King of Kings," made 23 years ago, beat the new crop of films in drawing power. It could have packed the Music Hall . . . Byron Palmer, son of publisher Harlan G. Palmer of the Hollywood Citizen-News, is an absolute rave in the musical, "Where's Charlie?" People are comparing his profile with that of Jack Barrymore, and his singing has brought scads of offers from movieland . . . Both Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel, silent film stars, have their own television shows here.

Just learned that it was Barry Fitzgerald who taught Shirley Temple the Irish brogue she uses in "Always Sweethearts." . . . Josh Logan, who directed the sensationally successful "South Pacific," is off to Europe . . . Wall streeters thought a revolution was starting in their area when Farley Granger, Paul Kelly and other Metro players shot off 27 firearms in a chase sequence for "Side Street." Naturally the company had the law's permission to do the shooting, but the citizens didn't know what gave until it was all over.

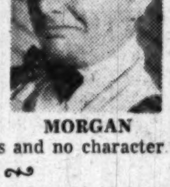
Adversity Got Him Nicer, Says Morgan

By Sonia Stein

"MAYBE I should break a leg so everybody can say, 'Oh, yeah. Morgan. He's the comedian with the broken leg all the other comedians make funny jokes about.'"

On this doleful exit line, Henry Morgan got out of the cab in front of his apartment house and that's the last I saw of him. But it's not the last I heard of him. I heard him twice since then on his NBC show (WRC, 8:30 p. m., Sundays) and I advise him to keep his limbs sound. Because people might better say, "Oh, yeah. Morgan. He's the comedian that's so funny all the other comedians would like to break his neck because. . ."



MORGAN

Morgan's wail that he doesn't have a "character" like Jack Benny, who allegedly guards his pennies like they were red corpuscles, or Phil Harris, whose brain is in hock, seems so silly. Henry, baby, we love you as you are. Two sound legs and no character.

MORGAN recently got back into the folding money fold again after some long, lean months. "I got much nicer not eating," he said, in delicate reference to his reputation for sharp-tongued behavior with his former sponsors, which presumably led to the lean months.

Maybe so. But he also seems to have become more modest. Too modest. "Two or three sponsors ago," as Henry would say, he gave part of his show away to Arnold Stang, who plays Girard. There are no better hands to put it in, and that's fine.

But now, he has given away another part of the show to Pert Kelton and to Clarence Hartsell (who once played Uncle Fletcher on "Vic and Sade"), and usually gives part of it to Fred Allen. ("I know you did, Fred, and I appreciate it" as much as Henry does.)

What does this make Henry? A fine, modest, unassuming young man who is willing to play straight man for the rest of the cast and shine only when it's his turn.

The problem probably rests on Morgan's type of humor which shows up best in pocket-size dramas and monologues (like his Professor Heinrich von Morgan dissertations) and doesn't put up a decent struggle when it's pitted against such raucous humor as Girard's and Patsy's.

When NBC invests its money in Henry Morgan I want more Morgan for their money. If the NBC executives don't really like his brand of humor, let 'em listen to "Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis." I won't interfere.

Anyway, Henry's ego probably got an inflate this week; he just got a sponsor, Bristol-Myers.

This puts an end to the gag about Allen sponsoring him although it doesn't put an end to the fact of Allen's sponsorship. The word sponsor is used in radio to mean the guy that puts up the cash to such an extent, that one radio announcer even contradicted a guest who used the word sponsor in its original sense—one who assumes responsibility for some other person or thing. (It would have been kind of amusing if Allen actually had bought the Morgan show to advertise his own. Would have shown proper faith in radio's pulling power.)

WHEN Morgan dropped his TV show because "the mechanics of it are wearing me out," it left a clear space for the Morton Downey-Roberta Quinlan show at 7:30 p. m. on NBC-TV. Downey will appear Monday, Wednesday and Friday starting tomorrow (WNBW) and Miss Quinlan will be the lark on Tuesday and Thursday. If the TV camera picks up the vitality and humor that Downey's visual performances in night clubs always have—and which radio misses entirely—he may be quite a video find.

Downey still has radio shows to do but he probably won't feel the strain of the two mediums the way Morgan did. He's more accustomed to working in the visual medium, and deals in an art which isn't quite as delicate as Morgan's.

FOR A MINUTE it looked as if WTOP Producer Larry Beckerman was advertising the station in high places the day he was lounging around in front of the White House with a station microphone and call letters in hand. Or maybe just lending class to the area. But it turned out the mike was "live" and picking up street noises. It's part of a very promising show which will start soon.

A baseball school of the air, with instructions from members of the Washington Nationals on how to play each position, will be the feature of a new sports show on WWDC. The show will be Tuesdays through Fridays from 8 to 8:10 p. m. and will also feature a brief roundup of the latest news and a mystery player contest.

A weekly "Courtesy Award" based upon letters sent in by listeners is a new feature on the "Lunch at 1450" program on WWDC every weekday at 12:15 p. m. Milton Q. Ford will make the awards on the basis of letters describing some unusual act of courtesy.

Seat Sale for 'Medea' Starts Here Wednesday

SEATS for the one-night stand of Judith Anderson in "Medea," on May 18, are expected to go on sale Wednesday at the ticket agency in the Willard Hotel lobby.

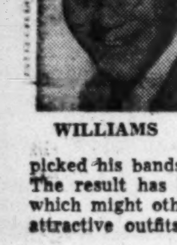
The Sylvan Theater setting on the Monument Grounds will be the scene of Miss Anderson's closing performance for the season in a role that has brought her national acclaim for the past two years.

This version of the Euripides tragedy was written for the star by the American poet, Robinson Jeffers. Her supporting company has been with her throughout the last season and includes Harry Brandon, Hilda Vaughn, Mary Servoss, Bruce Gordon and Harry Worlock. After a month's rest at her California home, Miss Anderson will fly to Honolulu for an engagement in the role.

Price scale for the Sylvan performance—the first view of professional acting the Capital has had in 42 weeks—will be: $3.60, $2.40, $1.80 and $1.20.

Williams at Glen Echo

ONLY 23, boyish-looking Gene Williams has been quick to earn the title of "Mr. Young America." This youthful veteran and his band take over the Glen Echo amusement park ballroom for two weeks beginning tomorrow night, playing nightly, except Sunday, for dancing from 9 to midnight.



WILLIAMS

Former vocalist with the Johnny Long, Vincent Lopez, George Paxton and Claude Thornhill orchestras, Gene began singing for a living when he was 16. After the Thornhill band folded last winter, he decided to form his own outfit. His first job was to be a "limited run" at Philadelphia's Click Club. "Limited" became 15 weeks.

Williams has his eyes on television; good-looking himself, he picked his bandsmen for looks as well as musicianship. The result has been a score of television appearances which might otherwise have gone to better-known, less attractive outfits.

Barter Has Big Plans

VIRGINIA'S Barter Theater has big plans for the coming summer season.

Plans have been announced for a unit of the Abingdon group to play in northern Virginia, acting Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights at Luray, and Sunday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights at Middleburg.

Another group will tour the entire State on one-night stands and a third will remain on the home stage in Abingdon.

Luray, heart of the sightseeing country, will play host to the group in the Luray Auditorium under a plan developed by H. T. N. Graves, Denver Aleshire, sr., Robert Harnsberger, William Harnsberger and Edward Lauck.

Middleburg, capital of the horse country, will play host in its handsome Civic Center, with Dabney Simpson and Howell Jackson heading the local committee.

Lederer Has 'New' Hamlet

Hollywood (AP).—Francis Lederer says he has completed a version of "Hamlet" which confines all the action of the play to one set. He doesn't say what he's going to do with it.

In any event, the accomplishment is the result of 10 years' work—the kind of intellectual hobby for which Lederer is well known. His "Hamlet" plan centers all the scenes (and logically, he insists) on a set representing part of a castle.

Lederer, working at the moment in the film "After Midnight," admits he has edited Shakespeare's play somewhat, but no more than is often done in conventional presentations. The idea, he said, came to him while he was appearing on the European stage years ago.

Hilltop Players Tomorrow Open 'John Loves Mary'

Baltimore's summer theater, the Hilltop, will open its twelfth season tomorrow night with "John Loves Mary."

The group's playhouse at the Emerson Farms in the Greenspring Valley recently has been renovated. George Schaefer, New York director, has been engaged by Producer Don Swann, jr., to direct the Hilltop's 20-week season. Olive Blakeney, "Mother" in the "Henry Aldrich" films, is one of the season's first guest stars.

Other players in the Baltimore group include Harvey Mitchell, Douglas Henderson, Robinson Stone, Martin Martlett and Elaine Ewald Swann.

Howard to Do Wilder Play

Thornton Wilder's Pulitzer prize play, "The Skin of Our Teeth," will be the theatrical event of Howard University's Festival of Fine Arts, opening a week's run Wednesday night in Spaulding Hall on the campus.

Wilder's witty account of man's persistent survival through the ages will be directed by drama department head Anne Cooke. Dr. Cooke's players include James W. Butcher, jr., Carol Foster, Katherine Pulliam and Roxie Roker. Reservations may be made by phoning Dupont 6100.

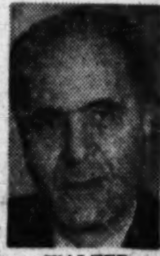
Dvorak 4th Well Done By Walter

DVORAK: Symphony, No. 4, in G Major. New York Philharmonic under Bruno Walter. Columbia 770. LP. 4119. $6. LP: $4.85.



WALTER

With those who believe that is the finest of Dvorak's nine symphonies, I am in agreement.

Written four years in advance of the E Minor symphony, (the "New World"), the G Major score reflects a greater degree of melodic richness, and a treatment of material that surpasses the more obvious fifth symphony.

This recording will be duplicated in this afternoon's concert by the New York Orchestra under Walter. Added symbols at the head of this column indicate that the recording is now available on Columbia's long-playing records as well as the standard disks. The performance of this music is perfect under Walter's mellow beat—and the recording is one of Columbia's finest. This is off the track music, but only because conductors and audiences are notoriously lazy about picking up new music.

The symphony is radiantly glowing, rich in tone and mood. We should hear it far more often.

When possible, we plan in the future to give both album and LP record numbers on material available in both forms. Prices for both also.

PAUL HUME.

come a bit venturesome after clinging close to tradition for too long.

Honored Festival

THIS WEEK will bring Washington still another festival. Howard University announces its fourth annual fine arts festival for the 4th, 5th and 6th, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The music department's contribution to the festival will be the choral program under the direction of Warner Lawson. With orchestra, the choir will sing the Te Deum of Zoltan Kodaly, and a Song of Praise, by Mark Fax, of the faculty at Howard.

The Kodaly will have its first Washington hearing, the Fax its initial performance anywhere.

Charles Weidman, who numbers a solid block of Washingtonians among his admirers, will give a dance exhibition during the Howard festival under the sponsorship of the university's modern dance group.

Eastman School

THE DEAN of American festivals, the nineteenth annual at the Eastman School of Music, is slated for May 5 to 12. There, Howard Hanson, who used to be almost alone in his consistent support of these activities, will continue his great record in behalf of American music.

Washington is fortunate in having two festivals this month: the National Gallery for five Sundays, and Howard University packing its ceremonies into three busy days. The stimulation this kind of activity brings our musical scene lasts throughout the many months when it seems as if we neglected the cause of music in our country.

The Music Box

The Watergate Season

SUMMER'S coming, Watergate concerts and all!

With the Watergate will come Gladys Swarthout, opening the series Sunday, July 3, at 8:30 down on the barge. Swarthout has been the largest drawing card to concerts in past years. It will be good to see and hear her there again. Other news soon.

First meeting of the National Symphony Forum Council will be held next Saturday in the Queen Elizabeth Room of the Raleigh Hotel. Howard Mitchell, new conductor of the orchestra, will meet the students. David Fulton, director of Forum Organization will preside.

Columbia Opera Company campaign workers are busy these days raising a $5000 fund to carry forward their new ambitious program. Plans include a performance of "Faust" in May.

American University lists a music education institute for their main campus, Saturday, May 7.

CONCERTS to be noted with special interest this week include today's organ recital in Washington Cathedral; Bruno Walter's first appearance here in over a decade; tonight's opening of the American Festival in the National Gallery, and tonight's Bach Ascension Oratorio on Catholic University Glee Club concert with orchestra. And Howard University's choral concert Friday evening.

The National Lutheran Chorus sings May 4 at 8:30 p. m. in Thomas Jefferson High School, Arlington—next Sunday evening at 8 in Foundry Methodist Church—and the 11th at 8:30 p. m. in Trinity Lutheran Church School, Hyattsville.

This is Music Week. Concerts of the next seven days reflect unusual activity, with Landon School's Lower School Chorus, under Wilfred Briggs, singing their annual concert to benefit the National Symphony on May 4, at 3 in the afternoon, in their auditorium.

Ronald Arnatt, increasingly well-known young musician, starts a weekly series of organ recitals at 6 this evening over WCFM. He lists music by Harwood, Vaughan Williams and Handel for the first half hour.

The D. C. Chapter of the National Federation of Music Clubs holds their Junior Choir Festival today at 4 in National City Christian Church, while their Junior American Music Recital comes Saturday evening at 8 in Calvary Baptist Church.

One for the Intellectuals

What Splits Literary and Visual Arts?

By Jane Watson Crane

"POETRY and Painting," a modest little show at the Whyte Gallery, raises a question that has recently been aired by the intellectuals. Have the literary and visual arts, so closely related in the past century, been divorced in this one?

In a symposium published in the March, 1919, issue of the Magazine of Art, such disparate personages as Alfred Barr, Lionel Trilling, James Thrall Soby, and Holger Cahill, join in unanimous agreement that they have.

The split originated in the revolt against a concept of the visual arts which threatened to limit their scope to representation of objects, ideas, or events which had been, or could as well be, expressed in words. Works of painters after Cezanne and writings such as Henri Focillon's "The Life of Forms in Art," shifted the emphasis from the values which made the two arts similar to those which set them apart. Recognition of the fact that each has a separate and distinct language, which in the long run is bound to lead to a more profitable relation between the two, for the time being has tended to sever the ties almost completely. The inevitable laying of the blame, common to most separations, is not absent here. Lamenting a lack of interest on the part of the writers, one proponent of the visual arts complains: "Most artists can read—but few writers can see."

A Pleasure

THE Whyte Gallery show is a pleasure to see, but sheds no new light on the matter one way or the other. The most it offers is a gentle suggestion of kinship. Some of the poetry quotations could as well have been found to suit the painting after it was completed as served as inspiration. One of the most successful, Helen Rennie's "Moon Shadows Resemble Islands," was inspired by a Navy bulletin. The general temper is romantic, with lyric poetry going hand in hand with lyric painting.

"Death in the Spring," by Sydney S. Gelfand, included in his one-man show at the Arts Club

Beginning tomorrow this gallery is showing a group of pen-and-ink drawings and works in color on scratchboard by Mitchell Jamieson. The majority were executed in New England for Fortune Magazine, to illustrate an article on the New Haven Railroad.

Jamieson's abilities are too widely known to require comment. What is of particular interest here is his development of the use of scratchboard, best known as a commercial art medium (cardboard coated with white clay to give a smooth, waxy surface) on which lines or areas can be scratched out on the surface covering.

AT the Arts Club there are two one-man shows of painting, by Everett Warner and Sydney Gelfand, and a miscellaneous group display in an adjoining room. The largest exhibit is of work by Everett Warner and is accompanied by the artist's notes to give the spectator a key to his point of view. These do not lead off on trails of theory, but aim to describe what he saw, how he saw it, and how he went about trying to convey it.

Sydney Gelfand's paintings sometimes have a dark, lacklustre aspect, which makes them hard to see in their present surroundings. One can only imagine how they might appear when adequately lighted.

At its best, his work is reminiscent of Pascin, notably Gelfand's "Death in the Spring," which has been exhibited at the museum in Springfield, Mass., and in New York. They are static, yet they have some emotional pull. They impress one as the authentic expressions of a sober, thoughtful nature.

That Jackpot

John J. Noone, left, of Greenbelt, Md., accepts from Milt Berger of Bates Jewelers the $2000 diamond ring which he won, along with some other gifts, on WTOP-CBS' "Hit the Jackpot" recently

GIVEAWAY programs, which normally defy criticism, have been coming up with some pretty funny prizes lately. And by funny I don't mean funny exactly. Sit down, "Hit the Jackpot." Got a few questions. Just what did you have in mind when you awarded John J. Noone of Greenbelt, Md., a postal clerk, a trip to the North Pole? What are you trying to do with John J. Noone, anyhow? Get rid of him? I see listed here among $28,000 worth of prizes in Mr. Noone's jackpot another one which is pretty suspicious. "A night on the town for a year," an expression that doesn't seem to mean anything and yet has an ominous ring. You mean this man Noone, just fresh back from the North Pole—if he gets back—is to be flung into the night clubs for a solid year?

It sounds to me as if the giveaways, drunk with their own success, are trying to commit the perfect crime. I've been listening to mystery programs too long not to know what the score is. Someone around these giveaways, some little guy who gets $100 a week for thinking up dizzy prizes, has gone quietly but criminally insane. He wants to fix all the John J. Noones—them and their $28,000 worth of prizes.

"Stop the Music" the other day gave Mrs. Freda Perry of Donora, Pa., an 8000-pound elephant, a homicidal gift if ever I heard of one. I wouldn't allow the beast in the house, Mrs. P.

Let's everyone stay away from the telephone till this thing blows over. It's a dangerous instrument.

JOHN CROSBY.

The Washington Philatelist

P. O. Department Gives Nod to Stamp Collectors

By William M. Stuart

AFTER many years of conducting a Philatelic Agency for the convenience of Philatelists with the prerogative of purchasing postage stamps for collections, the Post Office Department has recognized this army of stamp enthusiasts. In reorganization of the Third Assistant Postmaster General's Division, the name has been changed mainly to honor stamp collectors. Instead of "Division of Stamps," the name has become officially "Division of Stamps and Philately."

The Agency was established in 1921 and during all the years since, millions of stamps, as well as dollars, have been handled by the stamp division. The same efficient service will continue under the reorganization and collectors will have all assistance possible in their pursuit of the world's largest and most interesting hobby. With additional appropriations enlarged and necessary clerical assistance will be available, thus providing collectors with means of obtaining their stamps with the least possible delay.

Efficiency is a recognized factor in the workings of the Agency and the "Division of Stamps and Philately" well may take a new lease on life.

HIGHWAY postoffice service will be inaugurated between Dallas and Denison, Tex., today and special cachets were provided for the route.

Special cancellations will soon be placed in use in the following cities: Rochester, N. Y.; die bearing a slogan advertising Lilac Week, reading "Visit Rochester's Highland Park During Lilac Time"; Oakland, Md., die bearing slogan reading "Oakland, 1849 Centennial 1949, August 8-14" from early May through August 14, and New Haven, Conn., special die publicizing a mass X-ray survey during May, slogan reading "Have Your Chest X-rayed Now." Postmasters at above offices will provide slogan cancellations.

THE 6-cent air mail stamp to be issued in connection with the bicentennial of Alexandria, Va., will be released at Alexandria on May 11. The city seal is in the center of the stamp and on the left is a reproduction of Carlisle House, home of John Carlisle, one of the founders of Alexandria. On the right is a reproduction of Gadsby's Tavern, which was often visited by George Washington. The stamp is arranged horizontally, printed by rotary press and issued in sheets of 50. The initial printing calls for 70 million. First-day cancellations will be serviced by the postmaster at Alexandria, Va.

The 300th anniversary of the founding of Annapolis, Md., will be celebrated May 22 to 27. A special cancellation bearing the slogan "Tercentenary—Annapolis, Maryland—1649—May 22-27—1949," is now being used. The Annapolis Stamp Club, under the direction of Capt. Frank A. Munroe, jr., USN, president, will sponsor an exhibit of early Annapolis postal material. The exact date of the release of the commemorative stamp honoring the event has not yet been announced.

Slogan collectors have another one to add to the already large number issued during recent months. Altoona, Pa., has a centennial anniversary this year and a special die has been prepared. It reads: "Altoona Centennial Celebration, August 7-14, 1949."

AT THE Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, William Dahl, foreman of the post card section of the Government Printing Office, was the speaker. He related that billions of cards have been printed and it is a fact that in recent years the collecting of postal cards, both foreign and domestic, has greatly increased. Ellery Denison presided. At the meeting in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw., on Tuesday evening an auction will be held.

There will be a meeting of the Woodridge Stamp Club tomorrow evening at the Recreation Room, 1818 Rhode Island ave. ne.

The Washington Numismatic Society will meet tomorrow evening at the United States National Museum, 10th and Constitution ave., at 8 o'clock.

Schools Were Not Like That For Crosby

his own lack of innocence—and if there's anything a writer needs it's innocence—and has turned on the institution that taught him all the dirty words.

But I digress.

Theater Guild of the Air followed the trend the other night with a revival of Sidney Howard's old play "Alien Corn" (1933). This one preceded the current outburst against the schools but is in the current tradition. Our schools and colleges, I'm invariably surprised to learn, are not the gentle backwaters of culture we'd always thought. The moment history class is dismissed, passion runs amok in the faculty.

The dirty old trustees—all spies for the United States Steel Corporation—try to get the history teacher fired for spelling Russia on the blackboard in disappearing chalk. The mathematics teacher, a young liberal in love with the assistant Greek teacher, is blackmailed by those dirty trustees into rearranging the quantum theory so that it coincides with the editorial policy of the Chicago Tribune. The pretty young Greek teacher is told she'd better slip Thermopolae into the American Revolution or the college will lose a billion dollar endowment. She commits suicide.

Spirit's There

THE foregoing isn't an exact synopsis of either the two plays, Burns' novel or "Alien Corn," but the spirit is there. The backstage machinations at our schools and colleges are violent beyond belief and I wish I'd known it when I attended. The only visible drama at my school was the time my chemistry teacher had two Manhattans at a faculty party, fell into the bathtub and broke his ankle. The love affairs, the suicides, the ideological rivalries were probably there all right but they were kept decently hushed.

"Alien Corn" was a lot of malarkey when it was originally on Broadway, but it was very skillfully constructed and it possessed Katherine Cornell in the lead.

On the radio, skillful construction is taken for granted, which only emphasized the malarkey, and in the place of Miss Cornell, it contained Bette Davis, of the movies, whose Viennese accent in moments of passion moved abruptly into New England. In the end, though, she triumphed over love and the conniving wives and got to Rome (in the play it was Vienna) to study music.

It all reminds me of J. P. Marquand's remark about those Egyptian students in Cairo who are on a sort of perpetual riot. Marquand in "Point Of No Return" wondered plaintively how the Cairo students found time to study. I keep wondering how the American teacher in the midst of all this mayhem finds time to teach.

Sales Over 400 Millions

Radio Daily's 1949 Radio Annual and Year Book of Television says radio broadcasting's new revenue increased 7 per cent last year and total sales passed the 400 million dollar mark. The volume lists 2127 standard radio stations, 760 frequency modulation radio stations and 64 television stations as being on the air.

'You Are There' Program Set For Records

"YOU ARE THERE," prize-winning CBS program whose newscast reenactments have been acclaimed by listeners and critics as "living records of history," becomes a record in the more conventional sense this week, with Columbia Records, Inc., releasing two of its outstanding performances, "The Signing of the Magna Charta" and "The Battle of Gettysburg."

They will be available on regular shellac records as two separate albums of three 12-inch records each, and on a single two-sided 12-inch long-playing microgroove record.

The records, as did the original broadcasts, feature the voices of some top news analysts. "Reporting," in newscast style "The Signing of the Magna Charta" are John Daly, with the headquarters of the insurgent knights on the field at Runnymede; Don Hollenbeck, observing King John's forces; Ken Roberts and Quincy Howe sharing in the over-all descriptions of the event. "The Battle of Gettysburg" is "reported" by Hollenbeck, Daly, Roberts, Ned Calmer and Richard C. Hottelet.

100 Operettas Set For TV

More than 100 operettas, presented by the Schuberts on Broadway, may be filmed for presentation over television in the fall.

Midwest to Get More Video As Two Channels Open Today

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, April 30 (AP).—More Eastern television programs will be piped into the Midwest with the opening tomorrow of two additional westbound channels, making three in all.

Heretofore there has been only one westbound channel, along with one eastbound, in the coaxial cable link between the East and Midwest opened by the Bell Telephone System last January. Most of the networking has been on the westbound channel and the four television networks—ABC, CBS, Dumont and NBC—have had to take turns using it.

Now with three westbound channels in the cable, the networks can send into the Midwest a number of programs that have been seen only in the East. They also will be able to provide direct network telecasts of other Eastern programs that have been shown in the Midwest on a delayed basis from film recordings of the original telecasts.

There still will be only one eastbound channel for piping programs from Chicago and other Midwest points into the East until completion next year of a new radio relay link between New York and Chicago.

The networks all report they plan to make use of the new westbound facilities, and are discussing with sponsors what programs will be piped over the added channels.

ABC, for instance, will extend to the Midwest for the first time the Paul Whiteman TV-Teen Club Saturdays, Bowling Headliners and the Jacques Fray shows Sunday and the On Trial programs Mondays. The new channels also will enable ABC to cover the Midwest with the video version of General Eisenhower's "Crusade in Europe" that starts Thursday night, as well as the television editions of Stop the Music and Blind Date beginning the same evening.

Drama of Foster Care On NBC Program Today

To explore the significance of foster care, NBC's "Living—1949" will present a drama-document titled "Transplanted Children" today at 11:05 p. m. (WRC).

Lou Hazam's script will take up an actual case history, one out of 225,000 that are in the making today. This will be the story of one Bill Davis, who, through foster care, was saved from potential delinquency.

WTOP to Broadcast Philharmonic Today

WTOP AM and FM will broadcast the New York Philharmonic-Symphony concert in Washington at Constitution Hall today.

To accommodate the broadcast timetable, the concert will begin at 2:45. Bruno Walter will conduct. The concert goes on the air at 3.

Fairbanks, Burke on NBC

NBC has prepared two radio series starring Douglas Fairbanks and Billie Burke. Another NBC series which may be heard soon will be "Hollywood Stage," starring Celeste Holm. The program will be a weekly dramatic presentation.

Angling Season in Wisconsin Open May 14 for Most Fish

Wisconsin, with its 7500 fresh water lakes, 10,000 miles of streams, and millions of acres of forest land, is ready for another vacation season. May 14 is the opening day of the fishing season for most of the State's game fish, but muskies are legal sport on May 25.

Devil's Lake State Park, the Dalles of the St. Croix River in Interstate Park, the rockbound shores of the Apostle Islands, picturesque Kickapoo Valley, Wisconsin Dells, Copper Falls and Rib Mountain are major attractions for sightseers.

Tourists visit the Indian ruins at Aztalan near Lake Mills, the Indian Agency House at Portage, old Fort Howard at Green Bay, Villa Louis at Prairie du Chien, the old shot tower in Tower Hill State Park, the outdoor Norwegian Museum near Mount Horeb, Wisconsin's Territorial capitol near Belmont, the Dickeyville Grotto and the Portage Canal between the Fox and Wisconsin rivers.

American Lore in London

Visitors to London will find many American associations, points out the American Express Travel Service. The Chelsea district contains many memories of American artists and writers. Thomas Carlyle's House, 24 Cheyne row, contains many objects of interest to Americans, including a lecture given by Emerson during the American Civil War. John Abbot McNeill Whistler, the celebrated and witty American artist, lived in a number of houses in Chelsea where he died at 74 Cheyne walk; the last name house has been destroyed by bombs. Another famous American artist, John Singer Sargent, R. A., died in 1925 at 21 Tite st. There is a memorial tablet on the house. Henry James, the noted American writer, died at No. 21 Carlyle Mansions in 1916. During his last illness he was awarded the Order of Merit. All Hallows, Barking Church now reduced to ruins during the air raids of the last war was where William Penn was baptized in 1644 and John Quincy Adams, President of the United States, 1824 to 1828, was married here in 1797.

D. C. Players Cop Points In Richmond City Meet

By Marian H. Barre

A SHORT-ORDER decision took three men and a girl to Richmond last Sunday for that capital's city tourney; when the quartet came back to Washington one of the party had become a life master, two others had upped their rank to that of "seniors," who bow only to "lifers" . . . The niche in the hall of bridge fame goes to C. C. Johnson, vice president of the Washington Bridge League; Dr. W. H. Gorton, retiring president, and Dr. N. J. McHugh, a former first officer, became senior masters through a tied win for the Richmond team title.

Fourth member of the lineup was Mrs. Irene Surguy, herself a "senior." The localites won the first half of the game but slipped a bit in the finals to tie Ed Harlow's team for top showing. (In master-point events ties are not broken, each contestant receiving full awards.)

Johnson will be the third L. M. in this city, the others being Dr. A. J. Steinberg and Col. H. R. Skinner. (J. J. Parish and Mrs. Frederick Eberson attained that rank while living here, but both now reside elsewhere.) According to the ACBL Bulletin for April, 170 players from all parts of the country were on the L. M. list, the number representing less than 1 per cent of more than 20,000 members. These figures give some idea of the credit due Johnson, Life Master 171—three cheers for Charlie!

ANNUAL meeting and election of officers of the Washington Bridge League will be held Wednesday beginning at 7:15 in Hotel Roosevelt. Officers to be elected include president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and three members of the executive committee. Nominations will be made from the floor, as the league functions without a nominating committee. Having served two terms, during which time the league has doubled in size, President Gorton is determined to retire; some of the other officers may consent to be renominated . . . The usual master-point pair game will be played after the meeting.

Other master-point games this week include the Buckingham Village monthly Tuesday evening, a Thursday matinee at La Salle Studios, another at 1 p. m. Saturday at Euclid Studios, when the Agriculture Bridge Club is the sponsoring association.

Contract championships of the Philadelphia district end today with a match for foursomes beginning at 1 p. m. in the Bellevue Stratford Hotel.

Next tourney jaunt is to Staunton, Va., on May 14, 15, for the first annual of the Shenandoah Valley, to be housed in the country club setting of the Ingleside Hotel.

Far from a "photo finish," the open pair championship of Arlington Farms Club was a walkover for Mrs. Ann Scruggs and Jesse Duke, jr., who had a 39-point lead in the first half. Playing in the two rounds on April 22 and 24, the new titleholders bowed in the finals to Captains Neale and Stevens, but still emerged with a 28-point margin over runners-up Col. J. G. Seabourne and Charles Richter. Miss Mary Bristor and Comdr. O. O. Liebschner finished seven twentieths of a point under the second-rankers. Here's where the camera really was needed.

THE semiannual playoff for team prizes in the Federal Bridge League starts tomorrow evening at 1300 New Hampshire ave., continuing for the next two weeks. Last Monday the Federal held its monthly open pair game for master point awards, Mrs. H. S. Klein and Mrs. W. B. Russell winning north-south, while Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Rosson led east-west. Mrs. Dora Schwartz and S. Katz and Miss Laura Hunter and Joe White collected half points.

At the Women's Auxiliary on April 23 Mrs. Schwartz and Charles Lyons won for the fourth time in consecutive games. Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Boyd were top in the other position, second-place awards going to Mrs. F. Samuels and Mrs. D. E. Stephan and Mrs. M. L. Fisher and J. G. Stone.

The annual election of officers will be held at the next auxiliary meeting, scheduled for May 21 at Hotel Burlington. This meeting has been shifted one week in order to avoid conflict with the Mid-Atlantic regional championships opening at Virginia Beach on May 27.

Only one more team match remains to be played in the WBL annual prize series, ending on May 11. Winning foursome last week was the line-up of Ashton, McDermott, Steinbach and Harris, which had a board-and-a-half lead over the Stone team.

River of No Return

The famed Middle Fork of the Salmon River is one of Sun Valley's greatest attractions. The turbulent Idaho "River of No Return," as it is called, drops 1700 feet in 30-odd miles—the steepest rapids in North America.

U. S. 'Alpine' Resort

Closest approximation to a European Alpine resort in the United States is Mittersill Club, Franconia, N. H., which is a duplicate of Mittersill Club in the Austrian Tyrol, formerly operated by Hubert Pantz who built the New Hampshire Mittersill.

TIME And MONEY FLY!
RENTAL DOLLARS ARE GONE, GONE, GONE!
"YOU KNOW NOT HAPPINESS —IF YOU HAVE NO HOME!"
—Ancient Babylonian Proverb
THE ancient Babylonians, according to many ethnologists, were the originators of a lot of our modern savings ideas, including insurance. When the young Babylonians went to the rich and wise old men for advice they were always told, "Buy Yourself a Home." Four thousand years ago it was true and today it is true that your first investment in happiness is a home. A modern Trailer Home solves many high-price and high-cost problems; it is a stepping stone to a permanent home—and a way to invest rental dollars today in something that will be yours to keep or trade tomorrow.
Come to Trailer Headquarters today; inspect our fine selection of Schult, Travelo, American, Howard and Zimmer Trailer Coaches. You'll be amazed at their roominess and their many conveniences. Prices range from $1695; a modern Trailer Home can be yours with but a small down payment—the rest like rent. Come today!

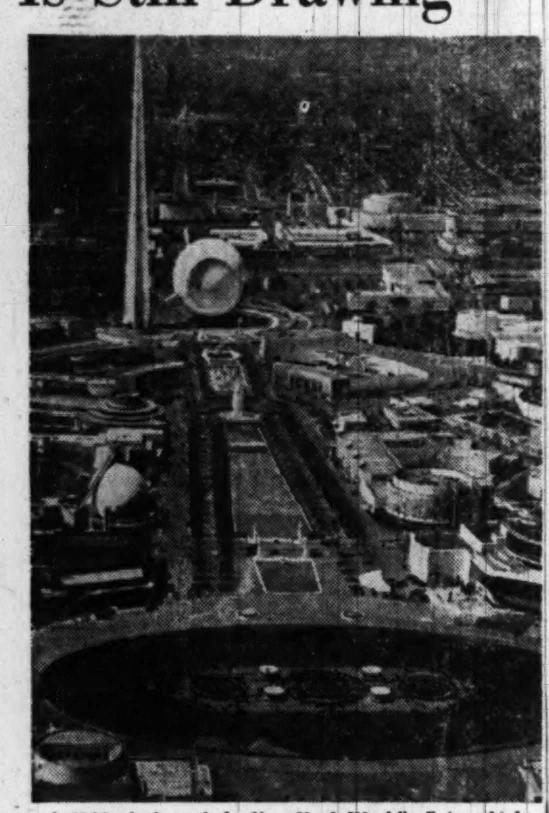
N.Y. World's Fair Is Still Drawing



A 1939 airview of the New York World's Fair, which cost 150 million dollars and attracted 45 million visitors. In the background are the famous trylon and perisphere, and in the foreground the lagoon of nations

By Saul Pett

NEW YORK, April 30 (AP).—Ten years after, the New York World's Fair is not completely dead, broke or friendless.

The remains of history's biggest, most expensive show are scattered around the world, some still functioning. A total of 150 million dollars was invested in "The World of Tomorrow." Tomorrow is now today but there's still $875 waiting in a bank for the last remaining debenture holders to claim their 30 cents on the dollar.

Of the 45 million people who came to see the show in its two years, a few thousands come back every year for a sentimental look at the old grounds. They pose for snapshots near the time capsule site at the circle where the trylon and perisphere once stood. The circle is now rimmed with the 58 flags of the United Nations.

Elektro, the 7-foot robot who starred at the Westinghouse exhibit, played a few radio and exhibition dates after the fair and then went into storage during the war. This month, the walking, talking, smoking mechanical man makes his first postwar appearance, in a Pittsburgh department store.

Still Screaming

THE 275-foot parachute jump still drops screaming patrons at Coney Island and the giant roller coaster, the Comet Ride, was last reported rolling at Caracas, Venezuela. Remember the fair's tractor trains? Some of them now transport kids at the Bronx Zoo and several others haul freight at navy yards scattered around the country.

At least three fair buildings were completely transplanted. The Belgian pavilion is now the Belgian Friendship Building at Virginia Union University in Richmond. The circular Christian Science Building, which was removed in eight sections, is now the Christian Science Church of Freeport, Long Island.

The huge Russian pavilion and its mighty 79-foot stainless steel statue of a man holding a star were dismantled and removed to Russia. Where are they now? It's "very hard to say," says the Russian Embassy.

Many model railroad fans still use the miniature trees which came from General Motors' huge futurama. G. M.'s arc lamp, which beams music, and a mercury vapor lamp smaller than a cigarette still play exhibitions.

Personalities Gone

MUCH, too, has happened to personalities associated with the fair. Gone now are Fiorello LaGuardia, a prime mover; Ben Bernie, whose band played for 2000 jitterbugs on the "dance campus," a dance floor which moved up and down on shock absorbers; Wendell L. Willkie, who had a "day" at the fair, and Franklin Roosevelt, who opened the show April 30, 1939, with ringing words to a frightened world.

Four months later the world was at war again.

Grover Whalen, the fair's first president, is now in the perfume business, but if you're anybody important you still can't get into the city without shaking his hand. Herbert Brownell, the fair corporation attorney, is back in private practice after managing two futile presidential campaigns for Thomas E. Dewey.

Billy Rose is the husband of Eleanor Holm, former star of his aquacade, and has turned to column-writing. The King and Queen of England have become grandparents since they visited the fair and then journeyed up to Hyde Park for hot dogs with the Roosevelts.

Mike Todd, who made his first big splash as a producer with the "Hot Mikado" at the fair, has gone on to other hits along Broadway. Rosita Royce, now appearing in night clubs, still does the dove dance she did in the crystal palace. The doves still flutter around while her gown slips off. Four of the original doves have died; three still help her out, the old troupers.

Corporation Dissolved

THE fair corporation was dissolved in 1943 but its last employe, Attorney-Accountant Ed. Umgelter, still was directly concerned with fair business—claims, suits and inquiries—as recently as 1946.

The fair site itself is now quiet, brooding Flushing Meadow Park, about a third of which is not being kept up because of a lack of funds.

Only 3 of the 300 original buildings remain—the amphitheater, which is still being used for an aquacade; the flagstone New Jersey Building, a replica of a Revolutionary War barracks, which now houses a police station, and the old New York City Building, which played to ice and roller skaters before it became the temporary home of the U. N. General Assembly.

A marble column marks the grave of the time capsule. Some 5000 years hence, it is hoped, the people of the world then will know something about our age by examining the capsule's 100 items, including a can opener, Bible, woman's hat, various toys and seven reels of film.

'Old Saratoga' Calls Visitors To New York

ALBANY, N. Y.—One of the Nation's famous battle monuments, a tall shaft of stone at Schuylerville, once called "Old Saratoga," marking the place where the ebb tide of British power begin during the Revolution, attracts hundreds of visitors.

It was at Schuylerville that the armies of General John Burgoyne were reduced to prisoners-of-war by a clever American force led by some of the greatest men in the War of Independence who fought in the Battle of Saratoga.

On October 17, 1777, Burgoyne officially capitulated, surrendering nearly 5000 men to an American army only half that size, turning the course of the war and bringing the French to the side of the colonists.

Today, at Schuylerville, the Saratoga Battle Monument has four openings in its base. Three of them are occupied by the statues of Gates, Schuyler and Morgan. The fourth is empty, a hollow tribute to the man whose courage on the field of battle was forever marred by his treason at West Point — Benedict Arnold.

Information on historic sites, including the Saratoga Battle Monument, is given in "New York State Vacationlands," a 196-page guide, copies of which may be obtained without charge after May 1, from the New York State Department of Commerce, Division of State Publicity, Albany 7, N. Y.

Mexican Hotel Sets Fast Pace For Luxury

Valles, Mexico (U.P.).—The Land of Manana has a new hotel designed to fit the most world-weary traveler.

It's the swank $2,300,000 Taninul, built by Governor Gonzalo N. Santos of San Luis Potosi State, the second biggest land owner in all Mexico.

Its attractions are many, all aimed for the comfort of the tired United States businessman and his wife. But no gambling.

An enormous circular tile swimming pool is built over a hot sulphur springs where the water remains constantly at 104 degrees. Wild rose and gardenia petals drift down from nearby bushes to float upon the steamy water.

Another swimming pool is deep in a mountain cave from which gurgles Choy River. A genuine river, not a creek. Wild parrots frequent the cave high above the water.

The Taninul is only two stories high, but it stretches for more than a third of a mile in length. A single patio is longer than any corridor of the Pentagon.

Its bar is the Otates, or bamboo, room, a big circular room with the story of the three musketeers told in murals around the walls. Other murals, all done by Ax Pena, have big sexy mermaids looking down upon the lobbies.

Tales of the hotel's grandeur are almost unbelievable.

One guest arose, looked for the dining room, and then ordered a cab for the trip.

The man behind the hotel, the governor, is almost as fabulous as his hostelry.

He was wounded in the revolution 32 years ago, paralyzed from the waist down. He went to the famous sulphur springs in the mountain country of the Huasteca Indians, midway between the Rio Grande and Mexico City. They called it "Taninul," which literally means "a place to fill your water jar," but is commonly used as "abundance of water."

Two months after his arrival Santos was cured.

Seven years ago he purchased the springs. Two years were spent in planning the hotel, four in actual construction.

"That sulphur water is for humanity," he said. "What we did is nothing compared to what God did."

Santos owns more land than any one in the country except the Pasquel family. One ranch is 14 by 14 miles. One herd of cattle numbers 5000 head, one orange grove covers 30,000 acres.

Rates at the 250-room Taninul run from 80 pesos for a single room up to 300 for the bridal suite. At the present rate of exchange that amounts to about $12 and $44.

But the rates include food, the privilege of swimming in any of the pools, the use of the Santos stables, and the privilege of hunting for deer, turkey, javelina, jaguars, mountain lions, royal pheasant, quail, white wing, blue dove, grouse, ducks and geese.

Pennsylvania

Pilgrimage...
When dogwood blossoms make a vast bouquet at Valley Forge, at Gettysburg and over Pennsylvania mountains . . . and rolling farm lands are decked in new grass . . . then it is time for you to make a picturesque pilgrimage to Pennsylvania. Your pulses will quicken, too, with other unforgettable "pictures": an Amish auction . . . miles of apple orchards beginning to bud . . . sparkling streams being whipped for trout . . . a land where every highway and byway leads to vacation adventures.

Whistle Stopping

There Was a Fisher Lady

By Orval Hopkins

MY mother-in-law once caught a large fish in a lake in Wyoming. From what I can gather by grilling the family archivist, her husband, that's the only fish she ever caught. She has told my son, Sam, 4, about it so often that Sam thinks she caught a covey of fish. He loves it. She has now become interested in the fish they're getting at Oregon Inlet, down in North Carolina. I'm worrying my head off trying to get the Berlin blockade lifted, and Edna chirps, "You read about the channel bass they're getting down Oregon Inlet?" Last week, while she and my father-in-law were calling on us one day I got out my map of eastern North Carolina that Bill Sharpe sent me. Edna perused it admiringly and then turned it over to read some of the feed-box material on the other side. The talk ventured off into other areas, but was brought back sharply to the beam by Edna earnestly asking her husband, "Gordon, why do they call that Cape Hatteras region the Gravy Yard of the Atlantic?" She's wonderful.

That gets us into North Carolina and to the fact that the Wilbur Wright Hotel at Nag's Head is opening today with the three-day convention of Rotary International.

Handful of Queens

From the Wilbur Wright, looking landward, can be seen Kill Devil Hill, where the Wright brothers made their memorable air flight. Looking to the sea, one is confronted by scenes like that which you see here: Left to right, these ladies are Betty Henshaw and Christine White of Burlington, N. C., and Marjarlene Thomas and Patricia Palmer of Kitty Hawk. They're on the beach near the Wilbur Wright, though, of course, I can't promise they'll be there by the time you arrive.

FEEL LIKE A CRUISE? An outfit called Tramp Trips, Inc., gets out a pamphlet in which you can find cruises costing you from $10 to $30 a day, depending on where you want to go and for how long. For instance, there's a 7-day schooner cruise on the Chesapeake for $71.50. You go aboard at Havre de Grace (after the races, I assume). And there's the 14-day number to Panama for $426. And the 100-day job for $800 from San Francisco, which goes straight down the West coasts of North and South America, without stopping, through the Straits of Magellen to Buenos Aires, shoves off again, goes through the Canal, back to San Francisco.

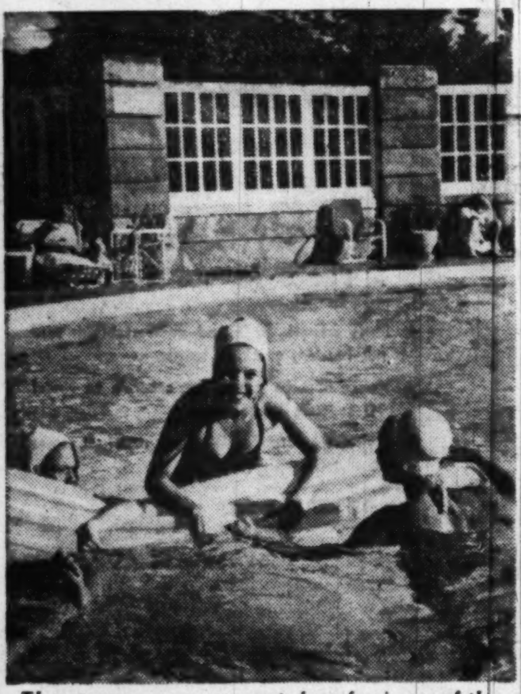
But the one I like is the 19-day, $160 or $200 cruise to "Unscheduled Ports." The book says, "The itinerary differs with every voyage and is subject to change right up to moment of departure. Ship brings supplies to loggers, fisherfolk and mining camps, often carries deckloads of horses, cows and sheep." This ship operates up around the Gaspe Peninula and the mouth of the St. Lawrence. The booklet is available for 15 cents at 353 West 57th st., New York 19. Or see your travel agent, for that matter.

CRYSTAL GROTTOES, at Boonsboro, Md., is open the year 'round and makes special efforts during the week for things like school parties and organized groups. The grottoes actually are a mile south of Boonsboro, on the road to Antietam, scene of one of the bloodiest battles of the Civil War. It's 59 miles from Washington, over good roads.

WILDWOOD, N. J., will be host to the Loyal Sons of America on May 16 . . . The Jefferson Hotel at Richmond, recently sold to the owners of the Cavalier at Virginia Beach, will be given a $600,000 renovation and restoration program, to begin sometime after assumption of control tomorrow . . .

VIRGINIA TRAILWAYS is resuming its vacation season coach service, through Shenandoah National Park via Skyline Drive. The service begins today and will operate daily through November 3. A reserved seat coach leaves Washington for the Park at 7:45 a. m. (EST) and reaches Charlottesville at 2:55. There passengers may return here by direct highway route, arriving at 7:50 p. m. Also a special part coach leaves Charlottesville daily at 2 p. m. for Washington This car makes stops along Skyline Drive and Front Royal for dinner, arriving in Washington at 8:40.

C. T. SMITH of 2904 13th st. So., Arlington, writes to say, "I was wondering if you knew of any quiet spots, from 10 to 20 miles from Arlington in Virginia, where old folks could sit in the sun and have a view or something to watch." Lubber Run Park is one, Mr. Smith. Its entrances are in the vicinity of 2d st. No. and No. Columbus st. It's very small, but is clean, cool and airy and its tables, benches, grounds and firesites are meticulously kept up by Arlington County. I can't guarantee that it'll be quiet, because the area is heavily populated. But I can guarantee that the stream murmurs, the trees sigh, and the sun warms. Another is Dumbarton Oaks Park, and Montrose Park at Lovers Lane and R st. nw. in Washington. These two adjoin each other up there at the top of Georgetown. You drive up 31st st. and bear right on R to reach L. L. Dumbarton Oaks is open only on weekends and, particularly at just this season, is what we sometimes call a riot of beauty. The gentle primrose, the sweet forget-me-not, the apple blossom and the narcissus, ah me, are all there, Mr. Smith. It's a lovely spot. Montrose Park, right next, is lush and green at this season and also provides benches and tables where you can eat your lunch.



Three lovely Sun Valley guests have fun in one of the outdoor pools at the Idaho resort. When summer evenings get chilly, the pools are heated. All pools are free of charge to guests

Gaspe Tours Announced

A summer schedule of combined rail and automobile tours, through the Gaspe Peninsula, is announced by A. A. Gardiner, general passenger traffic manager Canadian National Railways. The tours, made possible through the cooperation of the CNR and the Gaspe Tours Line, at Mont Joli, Quebec, will operate on a daily schedule through July and August, while regular trips also will be made on June 22, 26, and 30 and September 1, 5, 9, 13 and 17.

Line Enters S. A. Run

The Conte Biancamano and Conte Grande, two of four Italian liners to survive the war, are expected to enter the passenger run between Italy and South America in late autumn.

During the war they served as the United States transports Hermitage and Monticello, respectively. Both vessels were operated before the war between New York and Italy by the Italian Line. They were seized in Allied waters when Italy entered the war and returned to the Italian government two years ago.

The Conte Biancamano has been undergoing reconditioning at Malfalcone and the Conte Grande at Genoa. Italy's other surviving big liners, the Vulcania and Saturnia, are running between New York and Genoa for the Italian Line, with American Export Lines as their American agent.

MAINE

is the answer to the question: "So you're planning to camp out this summer?" Not only is Maine's scenic beauty a breathtaker, but there's every kind of sport and every form of loafing for lovers of the outdoor life. Guides are plentiful—so are lakes for fishing and canoeing. And Maine "cooked-out" meals are made for hearty appetites.

? Are camping sites in Maine easy to reach by car or train?

Yes, indeed! Everything needed for a pleasant vacation in Maine is easy to reach by train or first class roads. Pines are near the shore, shore is near the lakes, lakes are near and in the mountains. Maine is large enough to have everything and small enough to have everything nearby.

? Suppose a man wants to camp, but the rest of his family wants to stay at an inn?

Just as the mountains are near the shore, so the most rugged outdoor life in Maine is within easy reach of friendly inns and smart hotels. Maine is vacationland for everybody in the family—even if nobody agrees on how a vacation should be spent.

For complete vacation facts just mail the coupon today.

Freezer a 'Must', City, Farm Wives Say

By Lucia Brown

A SMALL family in the city and a big family in the country—their use of a home freezer differs but both agree that it's practically indispensable!

"I don't know how I'd keep house without a freezer now," said Mrs. Frederick J. Cullen, when we talked with her at her Chevy Chase home the other day. Mrs. Adolph E. Gude used almost exactly the same phrase in an interview at the Gude farm near Rockville.

The Cullens, with two in the family, have a gleaming, enamel freezer of 10 cubic foot capacity on the basement of their city house, buy commercially frozen fruits and vegetables, ice cream, cooked frozen foods, fresh meat and chickens to stock it. The box holds enough packaged frozen foods to serve Dr. and Mrs. Cullen and their guests for almost three months.

The Gudes, on the other hand, raise practically all their own food on their farm, which adjoins the Gude nurseries near Rockville. Beef and hogs butchered on the place, vegetables from the garden, chickens, turkeys and fruit are packaged and stored in their large farm freezer. The freezer supplies 10 persons regularly with food, for it is shared by Mr. and Mrs. Gude with a married son, a married daughter and six young grandchildren. The son and daughter live nearby and all three families store food in the freezer.

A Great Time Saver

TO GET back to the city homemaker's point of view, Mrs. Cullen feels that the home freezer's greatest advantage in her case is the saving of time spent in marketing. She leads a busy life, serving as a member of the Homeopathic Hospital Board, helping with the cancer drive, doing much Red Cross and other volunteer work. The freezer means that few visits to the grocery store are needed and there's always food on hand in the house.

Dinner on the day we called on Mrs. Cullen was to come entirely from the freezer, except for a tossed green salad. It would include fried chicken, broccoli, peas, hot rolls, salad and ice cream.

Rolls—the raw ones which come all made out, ready for rising and baking—are a favorite frozen item with Mrs. Cullen. She also puts loaves of baker's bread in the freezer, particularly if she and Dr. Cullen are to be away from home for a few days. It's a great convenience to have bread in the house when you return.

She keeps a few packages of such frozen prepared foods as chicken chow mein and Welsh rarebit on hand, but only for emergencies. Home-baked meat—leftover turkey, for instance—is often frozen for future reference.

Frozen hors d'oeuvres, which may be taken out and heated in the oven just before serving, are grand to have when callers drop in unexpectedly, Mrs. Cullen finds.

"You're always ready for dinner guests, too, when you have a freezer full of food in the basement," she points out. "It's a great comfort."

Reduces Work, Too

FROM the standpoint of the country homemaker, Mrs. Gude says it would be hard to determine just how many hundreds of dollars their freezer (15 by 4 by 4 feet) has saved them since it was installed eight years ago. It has also saved a great deal of work, she points out.

"We used to can a lot before we got the freezer and that's so much more trouble," she says. "Processing food for the freezer is very easy, though care in packaging is important. About the only thing I can now is tomatoes."

From 200 to 300 fryers and 100 baking chickens are packed by the Gudes each year. Fryers are killed, cut up and frozen about 60 at a time as they mature. About 40 turkeys were raised on the place last year, killed in early January and frozen. Some of them—as well as any other "overflow" from the freezer—are kept in a locker in Washington until needed.

Beeves Dressed at Plant

SEVERAL beeves have been butchered and stored in the freezer since the Gudes acquired it. They have them killed and dressed at the community freezer in Gaithersburg. There the beef is hung to insure tenderness, then divided up into the various cuts. A certain percentage is ground into hamburger. All the cuts and the ground meat are wrapped and marked, ready for storing.

WHETHER your food comes from your own farm or from a city super-market, a home freezer makes a great contribution to better living, helps you to save on the household budget. A picture of how a town family and a country family make maximum and profitable use of the freezer is given in the accompanying interviews with Mrs. Adolph E. Gude (right), and Mrs. Frederick J. Cullen (below)

IN THE COUNTRY, Mrs. Adolph E. Gude, of near Rockville, packs away all sorts of good things from farm and garden in the freezer. Here she holds a box of green beans grown on the place. The big, stockinette-covered bundle at the right on the table is a turkey, the little one next to it is a chicken. The round container holds sliced peaches

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

IN THE CITY, Mrs. Frederick J. Cullen, of Chevy Chase, stores away a supply of commercially frozen foods in the home freezer. The sizable freezer needs restocking only once every three months in order to keep plenty of frozen fruits and vegetables conveniently at hand. Fresh meats are quick frozen for storing in the compartment at the left, which also holds trays to provide extra ice cubes when needed

To Avoid Worst Errors:

Package It Properly, Then Freeze It Fast

"PROPER packaging and quick freezing are the two most vital factors in making a success in your freezing of food," says Francis M. Hawkins, jr., operator of the Olney, Md., Locker Plant.

Poor packaging—which lets food dehydrate and doesn't keep out foreign flavors and harmful air—has caused more disappointment than anything else among housewives putting up frozen foods, Mr. Hawkins believes. Trying to quick-freeze a lot of warm food in a small compartment—so that it may take several days for it to freeze—also creates lots of trouble, he says.

Mr. Hawkins, whose plant is one of the most modern in the Washington area, has been in the business since 1945, but has been making a study of the subject for much longer than that. His plant, built with the aid of the county agricultural agent, was started in 1943. During the period since, which has been one of great expansion for the whole frozen food industry, he has seen many changes, but none so great, he says, as the improvements that have taken place in packaging.

Here are some interesting points gleaned from him about the latest in packaging for food processed at home for storing in locker or home freezer:

Plastic Bags Last

THE new plastic bags—liners for boxes—will be available in large quantity this year for the first time. These can be washed and be used over and over, unlike cellophane bags, which will serve only once. Tops of these plastic bags, which are sold under various trade names, can be folded over and fastened with rubber bands. Sealing with a warm iron isn't necessary to keep out the air.

Laminated paper is now used almost exclusively for wrapping meats and the like, instead of the now obsolete heavy freezer paper waxed on both sides. The laminated paper has an inside layer of glassine cellophane, bonded with special wax to stout, white, wet-strength bleached kraft paper. This keeps moisture from soaking through to the outer layer of paper, cuts down dehydration. It is properly folded about the meat with a "drug store wrap," fastened with adhesive tape that won't come off in zero temperatures. It is easily marked with pencil, ink or crayon.

An aluminum foil container is one of the latest for freezing purposes. This is a sort of tray, made of the heavy foil, with a snug lid.

The new all-plastic container is a popular addition to the packaging family. This is washable and reusable, more sturdy than pasteboard. There is also a can with a pasteboard bottom and plastic lid, which permits closer sealing. The collapsible pasteboard boxes are still widely used for packaging, too.

Glass freezer jars, introduced last year, are favored for many purposes. There are also ingenious new tin freezing containers on the market this spring.

Covers the Field

MR. HAWKINS' plant presents an interesting picture of the way modern locker firms operate. Home freezer units, as well as locker service, are promoted by the concern, which has a display room where various well known makes of such units are on display. His idea is to offer a full service in connection with frozen foods.

Here are some of the different services available at the plant: (1) Quick-freezing service, where large quantities of home-processed fruits, vegetables and

Once a Year

Defrosting Freezer Is Different

DEFROSTING a home freezer is a job different in many ways from defrosting any automatic refrigerator, according to Dr. Earl McCracken, Department of Agriculture physicist.

From his study of home freezers in laboratories of the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, Dr. McCracken offers the following recommendations for removing frost and solid ice:

"Defrost before more than a half inch of frost forms over a considerable area of the refrigerated surfaces. Ordinarily once a year is often enough, but in humid surroundings or if the freezer is frequently opened, the job may need doing two or three times a year. Defrost, if possible, when relatively little food is in the freezer.

"Remove frost unmixed with ice by scraping, with the freezer in operation. If the freezer is not too full, move food packages from one part of the freezer to another as you work—rather than taking them out.

"Use special scraping tools sold for the purpose; or a broad, stiff spatula, a putty knife or sharp-edged wooden paddle. Catch frost on papers, cardboard or cloths as it is scraped from vertical dividers and walls; or collect it from the bottom with dustpan and whiskbroom. If pans and broom are kept cold, frost will not melt from contact with them.

"If ice is mixed with the frost or a complete cleaning job is needed, remove food packages and disconnect the freezer. Put the food packages on trays or in baskets that have been well cooled in the freezer. Pile packages compactly and cover with chilled blankets, newspapers, or other insulating material. Then work as follows:

"Scrape as much frost as possible from the surfaces, to lessen need for mopping up melted ice. If the freezer has a drain, speed melting by running cold water over refrigerated surfaces—do not use hot water because this would cause difficulty when starting the compressor again.

"Speed defrosting by removing loosened ice from the surface. An electric fan can help melt the ice, if placed so that it blows room air into the freezer or cold air out. If the freezer is upright, set the fan on the floor or a chair, to blow air directly into the freezer. If the freezer opens on top, the fan may be placed on the bottom of the compartment and tilted upward slightly, to blow against a side wall; or the fan may be put on the freezer and tilted down to blow into it.

"While ice and frost melt, wipe up the water with cloths, and clean the nonrefrigerated surfaces of the freezer. When defrosting is done and the freezer clean, connect the freezer and let it run half an hour or so to lower the temperature somewhat before replacing the food.

"When returning food packages to the freezer, take time if possible to make an inventory. It is a good opportunity to bring older packages to the fore, and mark them plainly for first use."

5c Buys a Lot Of 'Know-How'

TO HELP you with your home freezing, you can obtain the following booklets issued by the United States Department of Agriculture:

"Home Freezing of Fruits and Vegetables," publication IS-48.

"Freezing Meats and Poultry Products for Home Use," publication W-75.

Either can be obtained by sending 5 cents along with a request to the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C.

The University of Maryland issues a free bulletin, No. 120, "Freezing Quality Foods," obtainable from the Extension Service of the University at College Park, Md.

Remember, too, that freezer manufacturers issue reliable booklets on the subject which may be gotten through their dealers. Locker plants and other concerns interested in frozen foods also often have free publications on the subject.

Survey Covered Country

Freezer Owners Report Advantages

THE money and time-saving ways of a home freezer were revealed in a survey of freezer owners made recently by a large manufacturer.

The company questioned owners of its product in all walks of life and all parts of the Nation to find out, on the basis of concrete, personal experience, just how useful an appliance the freezer can be.

Here are the questions and the answers:

(1) Since you started using your freezer, do you make more or fewer trips to the store or market?

(A total of 91.9 per cent of freezer owners said they made fewer trips to the store. Only 8.1 per cent reported no difference in trips, or made no estimates.)

(2) If you make fewer trips, how many trips do you save each week?

(An average of three trips saved a family a week was reported — more than 150 trips saved annually.)

(3) Have you been able to save money with your freezer?

(A total of 89.8 per cent of those replying reported definite savings; 6.1 per cent did not answer this question, and 4.1 per cent reported no savings. Of the latter, some said they were not saving money because they were eating more and better food since they obtained their freezer.)

(4) What principal foods are you saving on?

(Meat and poultry, 88.5 per cent; fruits, 66.1 per cent; vegetables, 65.8 per cent; ice cream, 62.4 per cent; fish and game, 54.2 per cent; dairy products, 27.8 per cent; baked goods, 19 per cent. Many other specific food savings were also reported, including one person enjoying savings on "fresh coconut.")

(5) How are you saving money?

(Buying foods in season, 59 per cent; buying in large quantities, 53.2 per cent; buying at bargain prices, 47.1 per cent; raising some of own food, 46.1 per cent; buying foods directly from farmers, 42.7 per cent; buying at wholesale prices, 41 per cent; preparing foods in advance, 29.8 per cent; saving leftovers, 29.5 per cent. Additional sources of saving were avoiding spoilage, securing own fish and game, making own lard, quantity soup preparation.)

(6) Approximately how much do you feel you save each month?

(Average per owner per month was $14.50. This is for both urban and rural users. Urban averages were $2.21 lower a month; rural averages, $2.85 higher.)

(7) Are you enjoying a better variety and quality of foods since you purchased your freezer.

("Yes" was the answer from 89.8 per cent. Only 3.1 per cent answered "no," while 7.1 per cent made no answer.)

(8) If you had to do without your freezer, what advantages would you miss most?

(The first 10 "mentions" in the order of their frequency were: Meat and poultry, convenience, preparation for emergencies, fruit and berries, ice cream, availabilty of food, fewer marketing trips, economy, fish and game, out of season foods.

Eskimo Had Birdseye's Idea First

IT WAS by keeping an eye on the Eskimo that "more civilized" men learned one of the most important steps in preserving food by freezing.

On a trip to Labrador, Scientist Clarence Birdseye noted the Eskimo custom of leaving surplus fish, quickly frozen by the Arctic cold, outside the igloo for a few days before cooking. When finally thawed and eaten, he noted, they were as delicious as any fresh fish.

Mr. Birdseye realized that merely low temperatures were not enough to keep the fish in this perfect state of preservation. The freezing must be done rapidly, he decided, and to him today goes the credit for introducing this important step in the modern food-freezing process.

It was not that man hadn't known for many years that cold keeps food. Even the caveman was aware of this fact, according to evidence found in his ancient habitats. At a later period in history, man cut blocks of ice from clear ponds in winter, stored them away in deep holes in the ground to use them for preserving food in the hot summertime.

Since Civil War

FISH have been frozen on a commercial scale in the United States ever since 1865. Before that, fishermen used "weather freezing," allowing the fish to stay on the ice a few hours, a process possible in some of the colder areas of the country.

In the early days, the commercial freezing of fish was accomplished by placing them in covered pans surrounded by ice and salt. By 1880, ammonia refrigerating machines were used. A startling experiment was tried in 1889, when 100 5-gallon cans of eggs were frozen. The eggs were out of their shells, of course, as the shells will crack when they are frozen.

By 1905, the freezing of small fruits for jams, preserves, jellies, pies, and ice cream was launched in the eastern United States. These frozen foods were used mainly by institutions which found the larger quantities a convenience. The berries of the Pacific Northwest were being frozen in some quantity by 1910.

1929 Innovation

IT WAS in 1929 that the commercial freezing of vegetables by Mr. Birdseye began, opening up a brand new field. Under the quick-freezing process, tissue damage, oxidization, fermentation and organic growth are reduced to a minimum and the frozen food is essentially the same product when thawed as it was when it was put into the freezer.

The vast frozen food industry of today has developed with relative rapidity since the '20s. The commercial freezer was followed by the frozen food locker, then by the farm and home freezer. Thousands of these units have been sold, especially since the end of the war made possible large-scale manufacture.

All over the country they are contributing to woman's emancipation from household drudgery. Think how much sooner we might have reaped the benefits of this "modern" method of food preservation if someone had made a closer check on the Eskimo at an earlier period! LUCIA BROWN

Manufacturer's Estimate

Freezer Saves Family Possible $158 a Year

By Georganne Williamson

TO HAVE or not to have a home freezer is no longer the question, in the opinion of F. F. Duggan of the National Electrical Manufacturers Association. He estimates that 80 per cent of the food we eat is perishable, and therefore open to savings by quantity buying when most plentiful. On a $75 a month food budget (admittedly low), $60 worth of which can be frozen, the average monthly saving would be $13.20, or $158.40 a year.

The real question, freezer experts say, is which combination of home freezer and food locker is best suited to your individual needs. The amount of food consumed yearly, the proximity and facilities of a locker plant and convenience to farm products and meat at their source are determining factors.

Refrigeration and home economics experts outline the following possibilities, with their advantages and disadvantages.

Travel an Item

FIRST, consider the use of a locker plant alone—if you live near a plant which offers complete processing services and if you want to avoid a large initial expense. There is no maintenance beyond the rental, no danger of losses because of equipment failure.

The cost of 24 cubic feet in a locker plant is about $50 yearly. Processing and handling will come to approximately $42 for 1500 pounds of food. Travel cost of an estimated $20 from home to plant brings the total expense to $112.

Answers to questionaires by both farm and city people indicate, however, that convenience means more to them than a small saving, and most of them recommend a freezer in the home as a supplement. Supplies in a locker miles away don't help at all when unexpected guests arrive, and the constant trips to and from the plant can become a great inconvenience.

Another choice may be a locker in combination with anything from a 2-cubic-foot space in a regular refrigerator to a large freezing cabinet.

The added cost of 2 feet of freezer space in the regular refrigerator amounts to only $26.80 a year on one model. A 6 to 8-foot freezer, at an original cost of $300, is $70 yearly. Including three lockers at the plant at $37.50, travel expenses and service charges, $150 a year is the expected total on this combination.

Gardener's Favorite

CONVENIENCE in preparation is paramount here. Handling at the plant often results in better and quicker processing, saving time for the homemaker. On the other hand, if things have just been picked from the garden and a quick trip to the locker is impossible, they may be frozen at home to take advantage of their peak freshness.

Disadvantages are storage costs, which are higher, and the higher cost of processing at the plant. Also, some of the small chests have no space at normal temperature for chilling and short-time storage.

Another method to consider is to install an all-purpose freezer and refrigerator large enough for the family's needs. Experts recommend 6 cubic feet for each

See COSTS, page 6, column 2

Easy to Pack

Lima Beans A 'Natural' For Freezer

TYPICAL of the many vegetables that may be successfully stored away in the home freezer is the tender young lima bean.

Limas are easy to pack. Shell, wash, and sort them according to size first. Scald 2 to 3 minutes, depending on size, and chill. Then sort out any beans that may have turned white. (These may be cooked for immediate serving.)

Pour chilled beans in bag liner inside carton, leaving ½ inch "head space" at the top. Close package tightly, according to the instructions that come with the type of packaging you buy.

This funnel-type device speeds filling of freezer cartons with beans, and also protects the edge of the liner. It helps you to work quickly, an important point in handling food for freezing

If you quick-freeze your home-processed foods in your own freezer, be sure to put them in the coldest compartment immediately after packaging for best results

A Tastier Meal

Freezer Helps Put New Zest In Lunch Box

FREEZING of lunch-box sandwiches and cooked fruits is an unusual idea recommended by the home economics experts to enable children and workers to enjoy a fresher, tastier meal when the school gong rings or the whistle blows.

Sandwiches and stewed or canned dessert fruits are the bulk of most lunch-box menus. The trick is to freeze these foods the night before and pack them in the lunch box the next morning. When the lunch is opened four or five hours later, the sandwiches are completely thawed—there's no evidence of sogginess, the bread is not the least bit dried. In fact, they taste fresh made! The fruit is cold and refreshing.

Both sandwiches and fruit taste much better than if they were warm when placed and kept in a warm locker for hours.

Here's what to do. Simply wrap your sandwiches in moisture-proof paper, put them in an ice cube tray in the freezing section of your refrigerator or your home freezer. Put stewed or canned fruits in a covered paper container with a tight-fitting lid and also place in the freezing compartment. It may be most convenient to do this the night before, but at least two or three hours should be allowed for freezing time.

Good combinations for freezing: Sliced ham sandwiches spread with mustard and mayonnaise on white bread; a cheese spread and chopped peanuts on whole wheat bread; a liverwurst-and-mustard on whole wheat slices, coupled with egg salad on white bread.

Another idea: Chilling the lunch box itself helps a little to keep foods cool and fresh tasting. However, this shouldn't be done if it takes up space needed to refrigerate perishable foods.

Want to Stash Away an Elk?

Would you like to offer your dinner guests buffalo or white-tailed deer for dinner?

It's not necessary to become a big-game hunter to do this. The Department of the Interior, Fish and Wildlife Service, will send you a half or whole animal, dressed and ready to plunk into the home freezer.

Typical prices for a half-carcass are $75 for a mature buffalo, $67.50 for a young one. Elk is $42.50 for an animal over two years of age, $37.50 for one under two years.

"To avoid over-grazing of the ranges within the big-game preserves," a release for the 1948-49 season explains, ". . . big-game animals considered surplus in the herds are disposed of annually."

Slaughtered animals are dressed, quartered, and wrapped to meet the requirements of the transportation companies. They are shipped collect, unless otherwise directed. All orders are f.o.b., shipping point. Orders should be sent to the Director, Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior, Merchandise Mart, Chicago, Illinois.

The National Bison Range, at Moiese Montana, last season had 100 buffalo, 50 elk and 40 mule deer for disposal.

Sportsmen Find Freezer Comes Handy

By Walter Eichelberger

Sales Manager, Philco Refrigerator Division

SPORTSMEN today are discovering that a home freezer is a vital part of their hunting or fishing equipment. It's a grand and glorious feeling to be able to open your freezer, out of season, and say: "What'll you have, folks—venison, pheasant, trout?"

Yes, every season is open season with a freezer in your home. Preserving your game and fish by frozen storage is the simplest method of food preservation, and results in a far superior product in flavor and vitamins.

Using a freezer means that nothing edible is wasted, nothing is spoiled. There's no need to race home from a hunting or fishing trip. You don't feel compelled to eat fish or game day after day, or to dash around town unloading it on friends. A home freezer will keep whatever portion you don't want to eat or share—keep it frozen-fresh and tasty for months.

Cooking Is Easy

It's very easy to prepare frozen fish or game for cooking. You simply thaw it to the recommended degree, and it's ready for the oven, broiler or skillet. It comes out fresh and appetizing as the day you put it in the freezer.

Preparing game for freezing can be simplified—after you have bled your kill and removed internal organs—by getting an expert meat cutter either at a locker plant or local meat market to make the cuts. Be sure to get "meal-size" packages suited to your family's requirements. Then, after removing excess fat and bone, wrap large cuts and roasts in cellophane and overwrap in stockinette. For steaks and chops, follow the same procedure or pack in layers, with cellophane in between, and then place in a carton and seal it in cellophane. With ground meat, use the same methods.

Preparing wild fowl, rabbits and other small game for freezing follow the same steps as if the food were to be roasted, boiled or fried for dinner. Roasters may even be stuffed if you don't intend to store them in your freezer for more than three weeks.

Preparing Fish

SIMILARLY, game fish may readily be prepared for freezing just as you prepare them for cooking. First they should be scaled, the head, tail and fins removed, cut open and thoroughly cleaned and washed. They should then be cut into sections, steaks or fillets, or left whole, as you wish.

An illustrated story, providing complete details of how to prepare game and fish for freezing, is included in a new booklet, the "Philco Sportsman's Guide to Home Freezing, With Selected Recipes." You can get a copy from your Philco dealer.

It seems to make no difference in the flavor, juiciness or texture of game meats whether they are solidly frozen, partially or completely thawed before cooking. However, solidly frozen meats take 15 to 20 minutes per pound longer to cook. Large roasts cook more uniformly from outside to center if partially thawed. Ground meats can be more accurately timed if completely thawed. Steaks or chops which are an inch or less in thickness can be cooked while frozen. It's important to remember, with any kind of food, to cook it at once after complete thawing. Usually you will want to thaw wild fowl or small game before cooking because it requires advance preparations. However, fricassee will thaw readily in the steam while cooking. Partial thawing, slowly to avoid loss of liquid, and then immediate cooking are the steps in preparing frozen fish.

Speed Essential

Good Quality Of Food Held Important

A PRIMARY requisite for home freezing is to select food of good quality. Frezing does not improve but will retain the quality. Fruits and vegetables of good quality, picked at the proper stage of maturity or degree of ripeness, are at their best for freezing.

Do not delay preparation for freezing. "Quick from harvest to freezer" is a good rule to follow.

Prepare foods in small quantities. Don't prepare too large a quantity at a time. You will find that foods that discolor readily by oxidation can be prepared successfully without the use of antioxidents through speed in handling and by preparing small quantities at a time.

Package or wrap foods for freezing. Foods will lose moisture during freezing and storage. Always wrap or package food in moisture-vapor-proof material. Flavor and appearance of food are often sacrificed through improper packaging.

Label all cartons and packages correctly, giving full description of contents and date placed in the freezer. Keep an inventory record of foods frozen and removals so that you will know at all times the exact contents of your freezer.

Freeze foods immediately. Do not hold cartons of food at room temperature longer than is necessary. If you are taking food to the locker, place each carton, as it is prepared, in your household freezer until all are ready; then take them direct to your locker.

Keep all foods stored at zero F. or below for best results.

'Leftovers' Can Be Used Later

DID YOU ever try to estimate how much you could save on your household budget if you could buy meats, for instance, in quantity, and still use them up before they go sour?

If you have a home freezer, you can stop "estimating" and find out.

For with such a freezer it is possible to store what's left over from last Sunday's roast either cooked or raw—until next Sunday. You may keep meats for weeks, or even a month, without losing their succulence or flavor.

This opens up a whole new field for housewives who want to vary the family menu and still not waste meats.

You can have roast beef this Sunday, next Friday, and the following Wednesday without dulling your family's taste for roast beef—and at a considerable saving because the meat was bought in larger quantity.

Wrap in Foil

THE TRICK with meats is to wrap them securely in heavy aluminum foil and be sure the meat is adequately sealed in. When you wish to serve the meat again, take it out, place it on an open roasting pan, and allow about an hour per pound to thaw and heat it for serving.

The freezer also is a great saver for seasonal foods.

Fish or wild game should be placed in the home freezer as soon as it is cleaned, securely wrapped. When it is to be cooked it should be allowed to thaw overnight in the refrigerator.

While most foods respond well to home freezing, home economists have found that potatoes lose their flavor if they are frozen, either by themselves or in a stew or soup. They advise housewives to freeze the stew or soup without the potatoes, and add them when the food is to be heated and served.

Omit the Vents

ON THE subject of pastries, home economists are of two schools of thought. Some think pastries should be frozen uncooked—others believe they may be frozen after cooking. The decision is up to the individual's taste. But cooks are warned not to cut vents in pies to be frozen, to prevent dehydration.

Even fruit juices may be completely preserved in home freezers. Oranges, for instance, can be bought when plentiful and cheap, "juiced" and the juices placed in glass jars and kept in the freezer for a month or more before using. In the case of juices, however, about an inch should be left between the juice level and the top of the jar to allow for expansion of the liquid.

Actually, the home freezer is the answer to many a housewifely plaint against cooking and recooking the same foods. Cooks can now production-line their cooking, cook whole meals in advance and store them in the freezer. Biggest things to remember: maintain high standards of cleanliness; package foods quickly after cooking; plan your storage space carefully.

Freezer Ideal for Chicken

CHICKEN a la king, that dressy version of creamed chicken which includes green pepper, red pimiento and mushrooms, has proved one of the most popular of the many ready-cooked foods now being frozen commercially. Many a housewife would like to have a supply of her own making in the home freezer or family locker, ready for company or hurry-up meals. Many a farm housewife who is culling her flock at this season would like to convert some of her non-laying hens to this favorite dish and have it in frozen storage to serve during the year to come.

Fortunately, both chicken a la king and creamed chicken freeze successfully and keep well for as long as a year at zero temperature. Recent tests by Mary Kirkpatrick and Beatrice Mountjoy of the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, showed that even after a year's storage these mixtures looked and tasted freshly made. Neither one separated or "curdled," as sauces and gravies often do in freezing. Tests for quality were made of the product directly after freezing and then after 4, 8 and 12 months in storage. A slight drop in the texture of the meat was noted after four months storage of chicken a la king and after eight months storage of creamed chicken. Otherwise, no change from the freshly made product was noted.

INGREDIENTS to make 6 pints, each pint making about 3 servings: 6 cups diced cooked chicken (both dark and light meat); ½ cup chicken fat; 5 tablespoons finely cut green pepper; 3 cups canned mushrooms; ¾ cup flour; 3 cups chicken stock (broth); 3 cups milk; 3 teaspoons salt; 6 tablespoons canned pimiento, finely cut.

TO MAKE—Cook mushrooms and green pepper in the fat about 5 minutes. Blend in flour, add stock, milk, seasonings. Cook over hot water until thickened. Add chicken and pimiento and blend well.

TO FREEZE—Cool the mixture rapidly by setting the panful in a large container of ice water. Pack it in pint paper board containers with heat-sealing cellophane liners. Seal and freeze at zero F.; store at zero or lower.

TO SERVE—No preliminary thawing is needed. One pint package will both thaw and heat in a double boiler in 30 minutes.

Eggs Are Easily Frozen in Home Plant

EGGS offer one of the foods which may be easily frozen in a home freezer or locker plant.

Eggs should not be frozen in the shell, since freezing causes them to expand and break. Whole eggs can be broken and the contents mixed with sugar and corn syrup and then packaged in moisture-vapor-proof cartons, labeled and frozen. Use a tablespoonful of sugar, honey or corn syrup to each cup of liquid whole eggs.

Egg whites can be frozen separately without the addition of sugar or syrup.

Egg yolks, on the other hand, should be thoroughly mixed with sugar, honey or corn syrup, using two tablespoons of sweetening to each cup of yolk.

Eggs may also be frozen by breaking them out of the shell and placing each egg in a paper muffin cup. Several of these cups can be placed in a shallow carton for freezing.

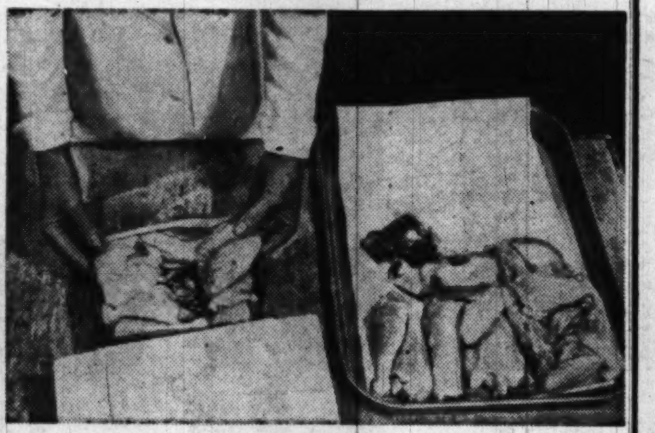
Plainly Marked Cartons Save Guesswork Later



Drying cut-up chicken on paper or cloth-lined trays in the refrigerator before packing for freezing is a good idea. They'll be cool and dry when you put them away

FINE SPOT for the spring chicken is deep in the heart of your home freezer, ready to take out at a moment's notice should unexpected company arrive.

Choose only plump, healthy birds for the freezer. Dress and draw fully, chill quickly and freeze with utmost speed. Wash and dry the frying-sized pieces before you chill them.

When ready to pack chicken, insert each piece in a fold of cellophane and pack together tightly in a carton or package which can be heat-sealed. Use medium-sized or small packages to suit family needs.

Giblets are best used fresh. However, if you wish to save them along with the rest of the chicken, clean, wash, dry, and chill them. Wrap in a separate piece of paper before packing in box with chicken.

Remember to mark packages plainly to save guesswork later. Give date and contents. Some people like to separate the different pieces, putting all the white meat, for instance, in the same box, clearly marking it "fryer breasts" so they can reach for it when de luxe company is in the offing.

Writing labels and making up boxes in advance is convenient and speeds the packaging job. Some packages cannot be labeled after sealing.

Preparing Frozen Meats Explained

FOR BEST freezing and storing results, meat should be wrapped and either heat sealed or lock sealed in moisture-vapor-proof material which is odor free. For example, cellophane with locker paper or cellophane with stockinette may be used with excellent results. Good quality beef, properly wrapped, may be kept satisfactorily for a year.

Meats may be boned for easier wrapping. Boned meat also requires less storage space. But boning does not improve quality.

Variety meats such as brains, heart, liver, tongue, and sweet breads freeze and keep surprisingly well. Freeze in family-size cartons or packages so that it will not be necessary to thaw more than is needed at one time. Wrap well so that moisture and flavor are not lost through the freezing and storage period.

Practically all types of meat may be frozen but their holding time varies. Adding salt before freezing may limit the storage period. Beefstock as well as ground beef will keep for six months if held at zero F. Good qualtiy pork, properly dressed and packaged, will keep satisfactorily for six months. Seasoned sausage with salt can be kept only three months without a slight change in color and flavor while unseasoned unsalted sausage can usually be held for six months. Pork fat may become rancid even though stored at zero F. after a short while. Lamb and veal may be compared with beef as to keeping quality.

If ham and bacon are to be kept several weeks or longer, they will keep better frozen than by any other method of preservation. Such meats which have a large amount of fat and where salt is used in processing have a tendency to rancidity thus limiting the storage period.

Because smoked meats also have a tendency to dry out, make sure that ham and bacon are properly wrapped and packaged to prevent undesirable drying during freezing and storing. Package in quantities that will be used at one time and eliminate the necessity of thawing more than is needed.

Thawing and then refreezing causes loss of quality. Frozen meat may be kept as long as it remains frozen. When it is thawed, it is better to use as soon as possible. Meat when thawed is more susceptible to spoilage than that which has not been frozen at all.

Speed the Job

The Proper Wrappings Are Essential

ARE you food freezing this summer? You will find it quick, easy and fascinating. With the right tactics, asparagus and strawberries can bring the spark of spring to your January meals.

Your success will depend on the food you select and how you treat it. A canny eye for choosing, a deft hand in packaging, care in storing—you'll have sure results.

The goal in packaging is to keep the moisture in—the air out. Only moisture-vaporproof materials plus the correct pack will keep the foods you freeze moist and flavorful.

Efficient wrapping materials are available on the market this year. Home freezing kits for $10 or less have a good assortment of all things needed.

Wrappings for frozen foods should be moisture-vaporproof, free from odors, greaseproof, easy to use, splitproof in wrapping and in zero temperatures.

Now as to packaging. Asparagus we find easy to wrap in cellophane. Use either the butcher's or the drugstore wrap, as for most foods. Lock-seal, label and cover with stockinette for protection.

Cartons with liners are good for most fruits and vegetables, especially those with liquids. Heat-seal the edges; an iron will do the trick.

For all foods it's best to package compactly only the amount for one meal. Recent research advises aluminum foil or cellophane and stockinette for meats and poultry.

Wrapping cakes and pastry is easiest after they have been frozen.

Freezer Indispensable, Two Wives Agree

"We usually put about a fourth of the beef in our own freezer," says Mrs. Gude, "and the rest in a locker in town. We bring it out as needed. One beef will last a long time, you know, though it hasn't nearly as many sirloin steaks and other nice cuts as you might expect!"

Pork is also stored in the freezer. No seasoning is mixed with the sausage before freezing, Mrs. Gude says, as it loses its flavor if in storage for several months.

Peas, asparagus, broccoli, lima beans, string beans and many other vegetables from the garden are stored. Big blueberries from a patch of especially fine ones cultivated by Mr. Gude are a frozen treat. Applesauce and sliced peaches are among the fruits stored away.

BUTTER, churned from cream given by the two cows on the farm, is kept in the freezer. It was certainly fine to have, Mrs. Gude says, when butter was 90 cents a pound.

Such cooked food as vegetable soup and baked yeast rolls are also stored there. All in all, the freezer is the source of most of the good things served at the Gude table, cuts down on troublesome, expensive marketing trips to town, saves a remarkable amount of money in times of high food prices, and is a vital factor in running the house and the farm the year around.

Pick Top Quality Vegetables

VEGETABLES that are usually eaten raw, commonly known as salad vegetables, do not freeze as a rule satisfactorily. Namely, they are: lettuce, celery, radishes, cucumbers, tomatoes, cabbage and onions. All other types of vegetables may be frozen.

The best frozen vegetables are those picked at the height of their quality, then speedily prepared and frozen. When possible, plan in advance so that when the vegetables are picked or purchased they can be prepared for freezing at once.

If you have vegetables to freeze and are unavoidably delayed with processing, it is best to wash them and place them in your refrigerator. If allowed to remain at room temperature a gradual loss of food value, color, and appearance will result.

To preserve their natural color (which makes frozen vegetables so acceptable) all vegetables, except rhubarb, should be sealed before freezing. Scalding does not improve the quality of vegetables but it does minimize enzymic action, prevent loss of color, flavor, and quality during storage.

Vegetables may be scalded the required length of time in either steam or boiling water then cooled immediately in ice water or cold running tap water. Steam scalding is preferable to water scalding for most vegetables. It is best to scald vegetables in small quantities, say 1 pound or a sufficient amount for one package at a time. Vegetables should also be scalded in large quantities of boiling water, about 6 to 10 quarts.

It is also good practice to change this scalding water after it has been used six or eight times. This depends on the type vegetable scalded. A wire basket o- cheese cloth bag is convenient for holding the food.

Place the vegetables in boiling water or live steam and start counting scalding time after the vegetables have been immersed and the scalding water again reaches the boiling point. It is important to have all vegetables scalded quickly and uniformly. If cheese cloth is used in place of a wire basket, it is well to move them around in the scalding water a little with the help of a wooden spoon. Place the scalded vegetables immediately in ice water or cold running water. When they have cooled completely, drain and pack in the desired carton, seal, and freeze.

This publication contains valuable information for anyone interested in the art of home freezing and is available free to anyone who may write for it.

Corn, Sugar Best Sirup For Fruits

THE best sirup for sweetening fruits for freezing is a blend of light corn sirup and sugar, according to E. H. Weigand and Lois Sather of the Oregon Experiment Station. These scientists tested 13 different fruits, packed and frozen in 22 different sirups, ranging from straight sugar sirup and straight corn sirup to various blends of the two.

When the fruits were defrosted and served to trained judges, the highest rating for flavor, texture and color went to those fruits packed in a medium or heavy sirup containing light corn sirup. With the blend of sugar and corn sirup there was less oxidation of the fruit than with straight sugar or straight corn sirup.

The fruits tested were one variety each of apples, apricots, blackberries, boysenberries, loganberries, peaches, prunes, raspberries, sweet cherries, red sour pitted cherries, pears, rhubarb and strawberries. A total of 3798 packages of fruit were frozen in these tests.

Those who are freezing fruit may use either a medium or heavy blended sirup, Mr. Weigand advises. For medium sirup, use 5 cups cold water, 2 cups corn sirup and 2 cups sugar; for heavy sirup, use 4 cups cold water, 2 cups corn sirup and 3 cups sugar. Combine water and sugar and stir until sugar is dissolved. Add corn sirup and mix well. No cooking is required. Be sure the sirup completely covers the fruit in the container before sealing for freezing.

Heat Changes Affect Frozen Food Quality

MOST homemakers know from reading the labels on the package that frozen food is not to be thawed and re-frozen, but they are not aware that constant fluctuations in temperature, or storage at above zero, can affect the quality more than any other single factor.

Except for foods to be held a short period of time, all frozen food should be kept at zero or below until it is ready to be thawed for serving. This recommendation is backed up by scientific studies made by many famous food and nutrition experts.

A leading authority on frozen food, Dr. D. K. Tressler, chairman of publications of the American Society of Refrigerating Engineers, produces tables to show that the storage life of frozen foods increases with a decrease in temperature, and that the lower the temperature of storage, the longer can foods be held without noticeable change in flavor, color, and vitamin content. He further states that storage temperature has more to do with the final flavor and texture than did the temperature at which freezing took place, and recommends that zero be maintained at all times, with certain fruits, such as peaches, stored at 5 degrees below zero.

The scientists are just as positive on the subject of temperature fluctuations. According to Dr. Faith Fenton, professor of food and nutrition at Cornell University, fluctuations in storage temperature, or thawing and re-freezing, accelerated the loss of ascorbic acid, known as Vitamin C.

Based on these findings, equipment produced today is designed to provide temperatures of zero or lower all the way along the frozen food storage and transportation chain, from processor to warehouse to refrigerated railroad car or truck to wholesaler to retailer. The homemaker is the final link in this chain, and it is up to her to maintain the standard set if she wants to serve frozen foods to her family at the peak of their quality.

When she purchases frozen food, she should be certain that packages have been stored well within the freezing area of the display cabinet, not stacked loosely above it. Some stores provide insulated bags for carrying frozen foods, which help in getting them home without too much change in temperature.

Frozen foods should be purchased last, so they will not be partialy thawed out through hours of shopping, or left in a warm car while the homemaker visits her beauty shop. This precaution is not necessary if food is to be used immediately.

To complete the cycle, temperature in frozen food cabinet or compartment of refrigerator designed particularly for frozen food storage at home should be maintained at zero or below, whether the foods have been home-frozen, or purchased at the store.

person, and these large cabinets are available with all temperatures—for chilling, quick-freezing and storing.

A 24-30 foot freezer, costing about $700, will amount to $166 yearly expense. That allows $70 for depreciation, $28 for interest, $14 for upkeep and $54 for electricity. If you think that a home freezer doesn't do a complete job unless it can house a hog or steer, there are walk-in models selling at $995.

Farm families find these large sizes valuable for holding their crops until they can get a better price on the market. All travel is eliminated and the cost of preparation is lower, although the over-all cost is often higher.

The greater the amount of food prepared in this way, the more money saved and the more pared from the initial cost of the machinery. Against it are chances of food losses through equipment failure and interruption of the electrical current.

New Food Bags Impervious to Extreme Cold

FOOD BAGS for deep freeze use made of Bakelite polythylene may be reused and will not deteriorate, stick together nor crack even in subzero temperatures.

No outer covering is necessary when these bags are used for meats, pastry, fruits, fish or vegetables and they can be easily and quickly cleaned for reuse with soap and water.

The bags are available in various sizes and have a variety of additional uses such as refrigerator bags, cookie jar liners, salt and sugar bags, moisture-proof covers, travel kits for toilet articles, moth-proof envelopes as well as covers for documents and valuable papers that must be protected from moisture, mildew and other deteriorating factors.

Dinners on the table in double-quick time, for it practically all came out of the freezer! Here are a juicy steak and corn on the cob, flanked by a bowl of buttered peas and delectable fruit salad. The hot roll was in a frozen state only a little while ago, as was the soup. Ice cream made a shorter trip from the freezer, is still cold and smooth. Topping it are frozen raspberries. Beside it is a slice of cake which tastes as fresh as though just baked but has been in the freezer for several weeks

Needed: The Unit, a Little Know-How

Rules Are Few, Easy to Follow

IT'S easier than you think to freeze foods in your own home for consumption at a later date. All you need, apart from the food and a freezing-storage unit, is the know-how, which only means following a few simple rules.

That is a pin-pointing of the subject by a frozen foods expert who could talk for hours on any phase of it: Mrs. Elsie Dawson, food specialist in the foods and nutrition division, Bureau Human Nutrition and Economics, Department of Agriculture.

Thus when winter winds howl in tune with your husband, who yearns for strawberry shortcake, or corn-on-the-cob, it could be a cinch to have it on the table in minutes. Instead of running to the grocery's frozen food locker for it, all you'd have to do is take it from your own.

In a few months, Mrs. Dawson says, the Agriculture Department will issue a comprehensive bulletin on deep-freezing. When work is completed on it, the bulletin will outline the handling of 80 fruits and vegetables, starting with picking them from your garden and seeing them through each step until, perhaps months later, they're on the festive board.

Fruits, Vegetables

GENERALLY, the following rules apply to any fruit or vegetable you'd like to freeze (meat and poultry freezing will be discussed separately):

1. Get fresh-picked fruits and vegetables into the freezer as soon as possible. If you "harvest" them in the morning, says Mrs. Dawson, you should freeze them by afternoon. (There are a few exceptions to this rule, such as cranberries and blueberries.)

2. Make sure the fruit or vegetable is at the proper stage of maturity. Strawberries, for example, should be uniformly ripe, ready for eating, firm but not mushy.

3. Sort what you're going to freeze carefully, tossing aside damaged, over-ripe pieces. Use berries, asparagus tips, or whatever, of about the same size. It makes for better packing.

4. Wash thoroughly, and in cold water. Warm water may be harmful. Lift the food from the washing pan, [illegible] dirt to remain in it. Use several pans, if necessary.

5. Prepare the food as if you were going to have it for dinner that night. Pits should be removed, etc.

Those are the rules leading up to placing the food in a moisture-vapor proof container, sealing the container and placing it in the freezer. Once in the freezer, which should be set at zero degrees or lower, your job is ended.

Most fruits and vegetables will keep for nine months to a year, according to Mrs. Dawson — if they're packaged properly and kept at a temperature of zero or below.

Containers

THERE are a few tricks, however, between the rules outlined above and placing the fruit or vegetable in the freezer. There is the matter of containers, and, according to personal preference, the use of syrup with fruits, brine with vegetables, and scalding of vegetables prior to packing in containers.

Since peaches are one of the most popular fruits used in deep-freezing hereabouts, here's how they are handled after having been peeled and sliced:

A batch of syrup is prepared (three cups of sugar to four cups of water) and a small amount of ascorbic acid (Vitamin C) is mixed into it. The acid, available at drugstores, keeps in the light color and fresh flavor of the peaches. For a bushel of medium sized peaches, three gallons of syrup is necessary.

A quantity of the syrup, which must be cold, is poured into each container, and the peaches then are packed in. They should be pressed down so that they are completely covered by the syrup. Depending on the size of the container, an air space varying from a half inch to one and one-half inches is left at the top, and the container is sealed.

After that, the containers are ready for the freezer.

Pack in Brine

VEGETABLES that are not packed in syrup, may be packed in brine made of 1 to 2 per cent salt solution. It's preferable, however, to simply pack dry, Mrs. Dawson reports. This follows scalding, which consists in:

Putting one pound of vegetables into a gallon of rapidly boiling water, and heating them through. Mrs. Dawson recommends a wire basket be used for this, and points out that peas take only a minute to scald, whereas corn on the cob 7 to 9 minutes.

After scalding, which "inactivates" the enzymes that brought the vegetable to its maturity, the vegetable is chilled in a large amount of iced water or cold running water. This usually takes about as much time as was required to scald. Once the vegetable is cool to the center it is ready for packaging.

When the time comes to remove fruits and vegetables from the storage unit and prepare for the table, this procedure is followed.

Fruits are thawed at room temperature, or in the refrigerator without opening the package. A pint-size package will take from two to three hours to thaw in room temperature, and from seven to eight hours in the refrigerator.

Frozen vegetables, unlike fruits, are handled by tossing them in a small amount of lightly salted boiled water, covering with a lid and cooking until ready for the table. Less time is required than if they were fresh.

Store at Zero

IN FREEZING meat and poultry, according to Mrs. Dawson, probably the most important thing, as with fruit and vegetables, is to wrap properly, freeze promptly, and store at zero degrees or below.

Meat and poultry should be sound, high quality. Poultry should be dressed, chilled and drawn. Roosters are tied compactly, fryers unjointed or cut up, broilers split.

Meat is trimmed into smooth, compact pieces. To save storage space, the cuts may be boned.

Storage time should be limited. If the wrapping paper, which should completely seal meat and poultry from air, is moisture-proof and the freezer maintains zero or below temperature; 6-to-12-month storage is practical.

Once removed from the freezer, frozen meat and poultry should be readied immediately for serving.

Chilled Cheddar

CHEESE is not noticeably changed in texture or flavor by freezing and storing at zero degrees Fahrenheit or below, provided it is wrapped in moisture-proof paper, heat-sealed, and held not longer than six months.

Dole It Out

Homemade Soup Is No Chore Now

THEY'RE freezing everything on the menu from soup to nuts these days. And the soup, first at the dinner table, is also first in the regard of many astute homemakers when they're evaluating their stock of frozen foods.

Homemade soup takes relatively long preparation and it seems to be difficult to prepare well in small quantities. By cooking up a big batch of it and popping it into the freezer, the homemaker can serve her family small quantities of delicious homemade soup at a moment's notice.

Frozen soups taste as fresh as newly made ones and take only a few minutes to be made ready. They needn't be thawed before heating. Just place them over the low heat or in a double boiler.

Since soup contains a lot of water, it's a good idea to freeze the stock or concentrated soup. Cabbage, carrots, onions and most other vegetables except potatoes are well suited to a mixed vegetable soup.

Vegetable puree makes excellent soup stock. Force the cooked vegetable through a strainer or mash with a fork to make the puree. Do not stir air into it before freezing. Reheat the pulped vegetable to drive out any air which may have got into it during pulping. Cool quickly by putting puree in shallow pan floating in pan of cold water, then ladle into tub-type freezing containers. The frozen puree may be used successfully in any soup recipe calling for pureed vegetables.

Soup stock may be made from bones or cooked fish (for chowders) is also fine to have in the freezer. Soups made with milk, such as New England clam chowder, do not always freeze satisfactorily because milk separates and curdles upon freezing and thawing.

Some other soups, particularly those with high fat content, may separate when frozen but these can readily be brought back to smoothness by beating with a rotary beater during and after heating. Among soups which freeze quite well are Manhattan clam chowder (not made with milk), French onion, noodle, and many dried bean and pea soups.

The Flavor Lasts

A FRUIT product which may be frozen and stored for long periods without noticeable change is the puree. This pulpy fruit juice can be made with berries by crushing, then sweetening them. Use 1 cup sugar to each 5 cups crushed berries. Package in liquid-tight containers and freeze.

Fresh vegetables for your table six months to a year after you gathered them! Fruit as firm and luscious in February as on the day it was picked! Meat—the choicest and most delicious cuts—whenever you wish!

It is easier to freeze food than to can it! The actual preparation of the food is so simple that much of the hard work usually associated with preserving foodstuffs is eliminated.

Much of the preparation for cooking is a regular part of the freezing process, and frozen food can be cooked in a half to a third less time than usual. A freezer opens up opportunity for worthwhile cash savings. Food may be purchased in quantity when prices are at their lowest. When food is home-grown, it may be picked and frozen at the peak of the growing season when quality is at its best. Freezing eliminates worry about spoilage.

1 Allows you to preserve fresh foods while sealing in all their appetizing goodness, their unexcelled taste and flavor and their full Vitamin content. All this without the normal drudgery of the "canning season."

2 Makes it possible for you to conveniently preserve foods you purchase, or those from your own garden, in large or small quantities, at the precise time that these foods are at their very best—their prime.

3 Provids the method to preserve food the easy way—the most convenient way—and the most economical way.

Bacon Dressing

SIR Francis Bacon is said to have stuffed pheasants with snow (after drawing them) and so preserved the delicate meat for long periods. Thus he made a real contribution to the development of frozen foods, even if he didn't write Shakespeare's masterpieces!

Nero's Nesselrode

OLD Emperor Nero—the same one who fiddled while Rome burned—is credited with having served "ice cream" made from snow rushed to him from the Alps. He is also supposed to have preserved some of his favorite foods by cooling them with snow.

5 Ft. Per Person

Freezer's Size Held Important

SIZE is an important factor in buying a home freezer if the family is to get best returns for the money invested, the United States Department of Agriculture says.

Home freezers run anywhere from 4 to 18 cubic feet in capacity, but it is possible to buy a chest freezer as small as 2½ cubic feet or a big 60-cubic-foot model.

As a rough guide to the right size, an average of 5 or 6 cubic feet for each person in the family is suggested. But right size depends a great deal on the way the freezer will be used. A city or suburban family, using it mostly for storing commercially frozen food and ice cream, may need only 1 or 2 cubic feet per person, whereas a farm family, freezing much of its yearly supply of produced food, may need 10 to 12 cubic feet per person. A cubic foot holds about 30 to 35 pounds of food.

It is better to overestimate than to underestimate. The trend of demand in both freezers and refrigerators is toward larger sizes because families are coming to appreciate more and more the advantages of refrigerated and frozen storage for food. Moreover, the larger size freezers cost less per cubic foot than the smaller sizes.

Electric consumption by a home freezer varies with its size, use and location in the house. A 10-cubic foot freezer, under average conditions, requires about 90 kilowatt hours a month. This figure, multiplied by the electric rate, gives roughly the monthly cost of electricity for the freezer.

Picking Spot for the Freezer Needs Study

A HOME freezer will do a better job for the family, if given a place in the home that suits it—cool, dry, well ventilated. An attached garage has proved a good location in many houses.

Before buying is the time to decide on the best place for a freezer to stand, says Dr. Earl McCracken, United States Department of Agriculture physicist, who has been studying operating characteristics of home freezers in the household equipment laboratories of the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics. Citing some conditions to avoid, he says:

"A hot spot is bad for a freezer because the higher the room temperature, the more the motor must run to maintain the freezer temperature and the greater the wear and tear and operating cost. On the other hand, it is bad practice to put a freezer where the temperature falls below 40 degrees F., unless it is specifically designed to operate at low temperature.

"Dampness is to be avoided because it may damage, not only exposed metal surfaces on a freezer, but also the motor, motor supports, and springs. In a damp place moisture is likely to condense on the freezer's outer walls and may even drip to form pools on the floor. It is always a wise precaution to ground a freezer, lest a user get an electric shock, and this is especially important if a damp location for the freezer cannot be avoided.

"Do not put a freezer tightly into a niche with walls on three sides because circulation of air is needed to carry off the heat generated."

"While the kitchen often seems the handiest place for a home freezer," Dr. McCracken comments "convenience can usually play second fiddle to good operating conditions because the freezer need be opened only once or twice a day.

"If a basement location is considered, keep the freezer well apart from the furnace. Don't put a freezer in a basement if there is a chance of flooding."

New Wrapper Can Be Reused

SPECIAL moisture proof material is now available for wrapping foods that contain no liquids while freezer jars may be purchased for foods containing considerable amounts of water or juice. The moisture proof material will not stick to foods particularly meats, and can be easily removed while the food is frozen. Pressing the material tight to the meat eliminates air in the package.

Drug store wrap is the easiest wrap and the nearest thing to complete air tightness. For short time holding, packaging can be simplified with only one thickness of this wrap which is fastened with a string, scotch tape, or rubber band. Stockinette or additional protective wrap is unnecessary to prevent tearing if packages are not jostled around in the freezer.

Individual servings of meat may be placed in an ice cube tray or square cake pan. If more than one layer, meat is separated with moisture proof material. This material is pressed tight to top layer of exposed meat—using no other wrapping. Foods that are kept for any length of time—three months and over—keep better in this packaging. And, best of all, this material can be washed and re-used.

With food containing liquids, the new freezer jars are ideal. These convenient containers require no sealing—all the user does is put food in the container screw the lid on and put it in the freezer. When the food is used, the jar is placed in warm water to quickly remove the food from the jar.

Thus, simplified wrapping enables the home freezer owner to protect foods without elaborate cash outlays or equipment.

Suggestions for Freezing Foods

FOOD freezing is easier than canning, pickling or other old-fashioned methods of preservation. Only recently was the advantage of quick-freezing fully realized—yet today it is difficult to find a food not obtainable in frozen form. Homemakers report savings in quantity buying of foods from 25 to 50 per cent over day-to-day buying.

In order for your frozen food to be garden-fresh here are a few suggestions:

Freezing retains more nutritive value than any other method of food preservation. Facts prove that frozen meat, poultry, fish and eggs are equal to the fresh product in nutritive value. However, retention of the nutritive value of fruits and vegetables depends largely on their treatment before freezing, the storage temperature, and on the method of cooking and serving. Don't neglect the fact that method of handling plays most important role, regardless of whether fresh or frozen fruits and vegetables are used.

Here are a few useful facts:

1. Freeze only best quality foods. For best results vegetables must be garden-fresh.

2. Some varieties of fruits and vegetables freeze better than others. Write the Department of Agriculture of your State for information about the best varieties in your area.

3. "From garden to freezer in the shortest time" is essential to preserve flavor and quality. Pick—select—freeze quickly.

4. Wrap in small packages—just enough for each meal. Never freeze large bulk packages of meats or vegetables.

5. Make sure packages are tightly sealed with moisture-vapor proof materials. "Flavor in—air out" is the key. (For containers, keep in mind the following: Fruits and vegetables: waxed cardboard containers, with or without moisture-vapor sealed inner-liners, which are heat-sealed with an electric iron. The outer box can be washed in warm water and reused if undamaged. Meats, poultry and fish: aluminum foil is excellent wrapping material; liquids and miscellaneous, heavily paraffined cardboard cartons are best. Glass jars can be used but they should be the new, improved type which are larger at the top than the bottom in order to allow the food to slip out easily. Always leave some room at the top of glass jars to allow for expansion and prevent breakage. Tin containers are suitable—(they must be enamel-lined for fruits or juices.)

6. Remember any temperature above 10 degrees permits fermentation to take place, which tends to affect the flavor of frozen vegetables. Keep your freezer at zero.

7. Formulae for mixing solution: (Used when preparing certain foods for quick freezing); a 2 per cent salt solution is approximately 1 heaping tablespoon of salt to 1 quart of water; a 3 per cent salt solution is approximately 1½ heaping tablespoons of salt per quart of water; a 40 per cent sugar syrup is 4 level cups of sugar to approximately 6 cups of water; a 50 per cent sugar syrup solution is approximately cup for cup sugar and water; a 60 per cent sugar syrup is approximately 6 cups of sugar to 4 cups of water. (This last syrup is too sweet for most users.)

8. The vitamin and where to find it: Vitamin "A"—Apricots, broccoli, carrots, green peppers, leafy greens, liver, sweet potatoes, yellow winter squash. (Excellent); asparagus, dairy products, eggs, green peas, peaches, prunes, pumpkin, snap beans, tomatoes. (Good). Vitamin "B"—Meats (especially pork), fish and sea foods, bread and cereals, green peas, cauliflower, asparagus, brussels sprouts, lima beans, sweet potatoes, (B-1); beef liver, fish and sea foods, milk, meats and poultry, strawberries, lima beans, and greens. (B-2); Vitamin "C"—Broccoli, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, cauliflower, grapefruit, green peppers, leafy greens, oranges, rutabagas, strawberries, (excellent); asparagus, beef liver, cantaloup, Irish potatoes, lima beans, peas, pineapple, summer squash, sweet potatoes, tomatoes, (good)..

Refrigerators Have Frozen Food Sections

Across the top of many of the new electric refrigerators is a frozen food compartment. General Electric, Hotpoint, Frigidaire and Kelvinator have introduced two-door models. (They also continue to be one-door models.) Behind the upper door is the zero compartment for freezing foods or for storing frozen foods. The second door hides the regular refrigerator compartment with its meat storage box and vegetable drawers.

Other makes, including Westinghouse, Philco, Admiral, Coolerator and Crosley, are sticking with the one-door refrigerator. Inside this door and across the top of the larger machines is a cabinet labeled either freezer chest, freezer locker, zero zone, freezer compartment or something similar.

This space is for freezing foods or storing frozen foods and ice cubes.

Scalding hot water is a "must" when freezing vegetables in the home. The deep-well cooker from your electric range is excellent for use in this connection

Color Film Tells You How To Freeze and Serve Food

IN THE FIELD of food preservation, new products and processes have contributed materially to the health and well-being of the peoples of the world. A film, titled "Frozen Freshness," sponsored by Frigidaire, demonstrates the proper methods of preparing foods for freezing and of preparing frozen foods for serving.

"Frozen Freshness" has its setting at a large country fair with all of its gaiety, its midway, its merry-go-rounds and ferris wheels, and its many fascinating exhibits.

A typical American family visits the various exhibits and finally enters the auditorium housing the frozen foods demonstration.

A home economist briefly reviews the history of various types of food preservation. The different food categories, such as fruits, vegetables, meats, fish, poultry, and cooked foods are all included as the demonstrator shows which should and which should not be frozen.

The correct preparation for freezing, and the actual freezing process are also illustrated.

The film, which is in natural color, is available for private showings, through Frigidaire's Baltimore Branch, 2315 Cecil ave. (Telephone, Belmont 9907). Its running time, 30 minutes. Its shipping weight is 7 pounds.

Bear Marketers

HOMEMAKERS with freezers watch the market for "specials" on frozen foods, buy when they can get the greatest bargains. Since they can buy in quantity at low prices and store the frozen meat, fruits and vegetables in the freezer, a very real saving in the food budget is effected.

Upright, Vertical Types Discussed

WHICH is the better choice in a home freezer—an upright or vertical type, or a chest or horizontal style? This is a question prospective buyers often ask.

Some practical consideration in deciding between the two are offered by Dr. Earl McCracken, household equipment specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture, as a result of his studies with home freezers.

An upright freezer takes up less floor space than a chest freezer of the same capacity but extra space must be allowed for its doors to swing open. An upright exerts more weight on a square foot of floor space than a chest and may need planks underneath to distribute that weight for safety. Though the chest takes more floor space, that space may do double duty. If the top is flat, it can be used as an extra work counter a kitchen or utility room.

At first glance an upright seems to offer the same convenience in reaching stored food that a refrigerator does. But when the freezer is full so that all shelves are packed, there is no convenient place to put packages in front while removing those from the rear. Some uprights have drawers to overcome this difficulty, but drawers take up storage space. Some chests have baskets for lifting out food. These add to the convenience unless they prove too heavy for the user, but, like drawers in uprights, they waste space.

Because cold air is heavier than warm air, a freezer that opens on top has a natural advantage over one with a side opening, in holding its cold and saving fuel. Recognizing this, manufacturers of upright freezers have had to construct them differently from chest freezers to offset this handicap. This generally makes the initial cost of a properly constructed upright freezer higher than that of a chest freezer of the same size. Operating costs of these two are about the same.

Finally, Dr. McCracken advises taking measurements before buying to make sure not only that the freezer will fit the place chosen for it but also that it can get there. Be sure it can pass through doors o. down stairs, around corners or under arches where ecess: y. And be sure the floor is strong enough to support it when filled to capacity.

Year 2000 Bids Well for Cooking

Your refrigerator and range of the year 2000 will be a wondrous institution. Take it from Richard Bolton James, a seer of the appliance industry and designer for the Gibson Refrigerator Co. of Greenville, Mich.

In 2000 you may turn the switch on the dash of your car or plane and by electronic control the frozen roast beef or steak, or whatever you select, will unfreeze and move into the infra red section of the attached oven. Your food will probably start cooking as you turn the "minute" switch on the dash and it will stop cooking at the moment you arrive home, or at whatever moment you specify.

Television Most Startling Change Since War, Traveler Finds

More Than Million Sets In Use Here

By Robert Hewett

NEW YORK, April 30 (AP).—What's the most startling change in the American scene during the years since the war? Take it from me—it's television.

Europeans know about television, of course. The British Broadcasting Corp. started televising the world's first daily programs in 1936. It resumed television operations three years.

But in England television is still a curiosity confined to a comparatively few fans in London. In the rest of Europe it's mostly something you read about.

So the billion dollar television baby that has shot up so suddenly here has quite an impact on a traveler returning to New York after three years abroad.

In England you take television or leave it alone. Mostly you leave it alone because there are only about 120,000 sets, all tuned to the lone television station in the London area. About 10,000 new sets are coming out of the factories each month.

That's a long way behind the 1,250,000 sets in use in 35 American cities—with 120,000 new ones being built monthly.

Wayne Oliver, Associated Press radio and television columnist, says television may change the American way of life, turn us from a nation of gadabouts to stay-at-homes.

Students of ingrained British character will agree that it probably would take more than a super-duper dose of television to change English habits. But as things stand today, there isn't much danger.

It's too expensive, for one thing. Prices of British sets are about the same as they are in America—from $200 up. But the average English income is less than half the American average and only the well-to-do Briton can afford a set.

Barrooms Don't Want It

WELL, what about television sets in barrooms. That's the way many Americans caught the television bug.

Blimey, mate, you'd get tossed out on your ear if you suggest putting one of those things in an English pub.

"Our customers want a little peace and quiet with their half pints," remarked one publican.

The popular Sunday Pictorial calls British television "second-rate," and recently said:

"The postwar record of television is appalling. Too few people can see it. The programs—except plays and outside broadcasts—are poor."

The Pictorial rapped the semi-governmental BBC "for treating television as the unwanted Cinderella of broadcasting."

Television, like radio, is the exclusive domain of the British Broadcasting Corp. BBC is financed by yearly license fees: a pound ($4) for radio owners and 2 pounds ($8) for television set owners. Advertising is barred.

This year BBC is spending two million pounds (eight million dollars) on television. That's a drop in the bucket beside the millions the four American television networks are spending.

Television Show Opens Monday

WASHINGTON'S first Television Exposition will open tomorrow at noon and continue through Saturday evening. The exposition—planned as an annual event—will be held on the second floor at 1300 G st. nw.

The theme of the exposition, "Understand television to enjoy it better," will be promoted by movies relating to television in all phases of its development. The exhibit, which will be open daily from noon until 9 p. m., will include demonstrations of the development of sets, cameras and the whole process of televising pictures, and will even show how television commercials are developed!

O, Posterity

Boyle Tells Of Guest Man On Television

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK, April 30 (AP). — I would say there are two ways to meet television — male and female. I am male. That is the downstairs technique. You sit there on a couch until the program starts.

Ah, but if you are female! That is a different matter. The lady goes upstairs and gets herself overhauled. When the girls come hoppity-step down, you just have to mention that Miami sunburn on their faces.

Of course the selfish male — and what male isn't selfish — may wonder why they don't bother to put an indoor tan on his face. The answer is very simple. Who cares about him anyway?

The only people who take care to see that they look right on television are those who earn their daily bread that way. And guest ladies. You know guest ladies always want things done right.

And guest men? Well, I was a guest man. And all of a moment there I was with two or three cameras pointed at me waiting for me to say something important. And all I can think is "What will posterity think?"

And posterity isn't even on the program — that is one thing that isn't scheduled by television yet.

Well, you are between two girls and you are supposed to be talking about a book called "How To Be Happy While Single." (by Jean Van Evera of Washington, D. C.)

And you say you don't think anybody can be ecstatically happy single or any other way. And the lights get hotter and the questions come faster and finally you wind up trying to defend this idea:

"Everybody has to be lonely in this world, but marriage makes it possible for two people who like or respect each other to be less lonely together."

After that I lost all sense of television. I was up to my ears in female argument. Not an unfamiliar position, either, for a man married nigh twelve happy years.

Washington Man Now Heads MBS

A NATIVE Washingtonian is the new president of the Mutual Broadcasting System. Frank K. White, who takes over the presidency of the network today, was born in Washington 49 years ago. He began his career as an accountant and says he is first, last and always a business man. He claims no profound knowledge of the showmanship or technical phases of the radio industry.

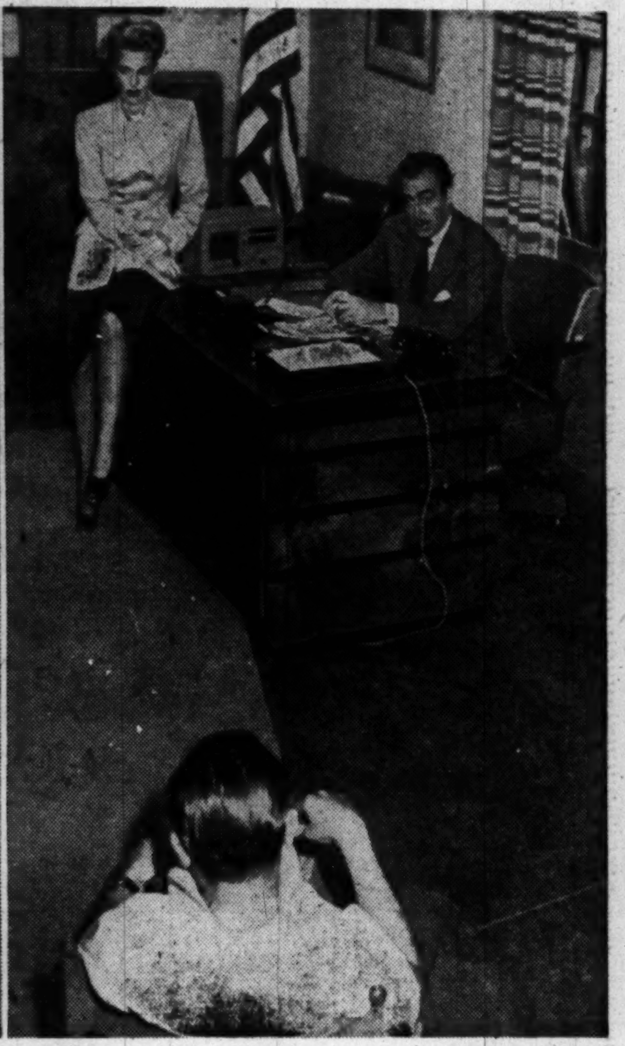
MR. WHITE

Until his appointment as president of MBS, White was president of Columbia Records, Inc., He was vice president and treasurer of the Columbia Broadcasting System before he was assigned to the presidency of the subsidiary record division early last year.

From 1924 to 1929 White was assistant to the president of the Union News Co. and then was treasurer of the Literary Guild of America.

He also served as business manager and treasurer of Newsweek, Inc., before joining CBS.

A director in a Hollywood studio (Jerry Fairbanks) rehearses John Howard and Anne Gwynne as studio technicians prepare to film a scene for a television movie. Special lighting techniques differing from regular movie lighting are being used to give viewers better reception. Half-hour pictures are shot in two days. They cost about $10,000



Producer Fairbanks watches as Gwynne and Howard play a scene for "Public Prosecutor," first film series written, directed, enacted and photographed especially for television

Half Hour Video Films Shot in 2 Days, Cost $10,000

By Gene Handsaker

HOLLYWOOD, April 30 (AP).—A new kind of movie-making is spring up fast. It produces films for television.

Its handful of eager pioneers work with astonishing speed and economy. Half-hour pictures are shot in two days. They cost about $10,000.

Television-film pioneers think that in 5 or 10 years they'll be producing perhaps 10 times as much film as all Hollywood now turns out for theaters.

Not So Lavish

NOT AS lavish or long films, to be sure. They won't cost two million dollars or star $5000-a-week players—no sponsor can afford such outlays, but one insider says:

"Television films will do away with the 'B' pictures. 'A' pictures will stay, but Hollywood will have to improve its quality."

Fifty per cent of television programming will be on film. Film is comparable, in television, to radio's records and transcriptions. On film, fluffs are eliminated.

Hal Roach, jr., president of the Television Film Producers' Association, says:

"All of Hollywood now turns out 27 hours of motion picture entertainment a week. Some day, television will operate 24 hours a day. I think 80 per cent of it will be on film."

Swallow Losses

THE PIONEERS, meanwhile, are establishing themselves as television-film producers. They're swallowing losses until there are enough television stations so they can charge profitable rates. There are 59 stations in the United States now. Next year there are expected to be 100. Films used once now can be re-sold again.

Television films already made offer everything from "Puddle Patch Club," like Hal Roach's old "Our Gang" comedies, to crime-detective dramas and slapstick.

Only one series is sponsored nationally. Grant-Realm's "Your Show Time," 26 weekly installments of drama based on classic fiction appears on 35 stations for American Tobacco Co. A deal was recently announced whereby Apex Pictures will make 52 weekly "Lone Ranger" films, under sponsorship of General Mills, for $520,000.

Television players have included Arthur Shields, Jeanne Cagney, Reginald Denny, Hurd Hatfield, John Howard and Beulah Bondi. They work for the Screen Actors' Guild minimum for speaking parts—$55 a day.

The players want to see what the new medium is like—and possibly get in on its ground floor. Television-film producers think their stars eventually will be better known than the Gables and Colberts. Home viewers will see their favorites once a week or oftener. They see the top ranking stars once or twice a year.

Pay Differentials

AT LEAST one contract provides that if the films ever are shown in theaters, the performers will be paid the difference between $55 a day and their big-studio rate.

A problem for the television-movie men is background music. James C. Petrillo, the Musicians' Union head, and the producers have not yet signed an agreement. Some producers use music recorded abroad or tracks from old movies. One says:

"Some buy a German recording of Beethoven, say, and dub it in. Another outfit supplies records from England. We have a library of music on film, recorded outside the country. Our editor composes music with scissors."

Another problem for the fledgling industry is union rates. Cutters receive about $225 a week, editing short subjects for a major studio. Their local has reduced the rate to $166 on television films. Cameramen have been cut from $97 to $50 per day.

The property man's pay is the same as in the studios, but his union permits him to double as set dresser, greenery man, and drapery man—forbidden on the major lots.

175 Enter Field

ALTOGETHER 175 persons have announced plans to make television movies. Only a few have done so.

Jerry Fairbanks, former movie cameraman ("Hell's Angels") and short-subjects producer ("Strange As It Seems," "Unusual Occupations," and "Speaking of Animals") turned to television films a year ago January. His "Public Prosecutor," 26 half-hour dramas, was the first movie series made for television. John Howard plays the title role.

Fairbanks has completed or has before the cameras a total of 251 television films.

Hal Roach, sr., turned his six-million-dollar studio into television last December. Shooting started December 22, and by January 12, six sample television pictures had been filmed.

Grand-Realm is negotiating for a renewal of its "Your Show Time" sponsorship.

13 Mysteries Filmed

THE Independent Motion Picture Producers Releasing Organization (IMPPRO) filmed 13 mystery dramas, "The Cases of Eddie Drake," on contract to CBS.

IMPPRO claims the record for fast shooting. Its last four installments were done in 45 shooting hours. All were done simultaneously. The two stars would go from one scene into another that would fit into a different installment. IMPPRO currently is making 10 and 12-minute television shorts.

Rudy Vallee's firm, Vallee Video, has made 16 pictures. Four are three-minute song films featuring Bing Crosby, David Street or, on one, Rudy himself. Rudy's production manager, Joseph Parker, says lack of agreement with Petrillo is delaying release.

Hal Roach, jr., has produced three sample films, each the start of a proposed series.

Five-Star Productions has finished a sample daily Western comic strip, a 15-minute mystery show, a 30-minute cartoon quiz.

There's another aspect to television films provided by the kinescope. This device photographs a live television show, directly off a receiving tube, while it is on the air.

NBC says its kinescoping alone far outstrips Hollywood major studio production. NBC made enough film of its live television shows last year to equal 369 feature pictures in length. From New York, it ships 223 prints a week of 28 programs to television outlets from coast to coast.

'Crusade in Europe' Starts Thursday

Ike's Book Makes TV Debut

By Sonia Stein

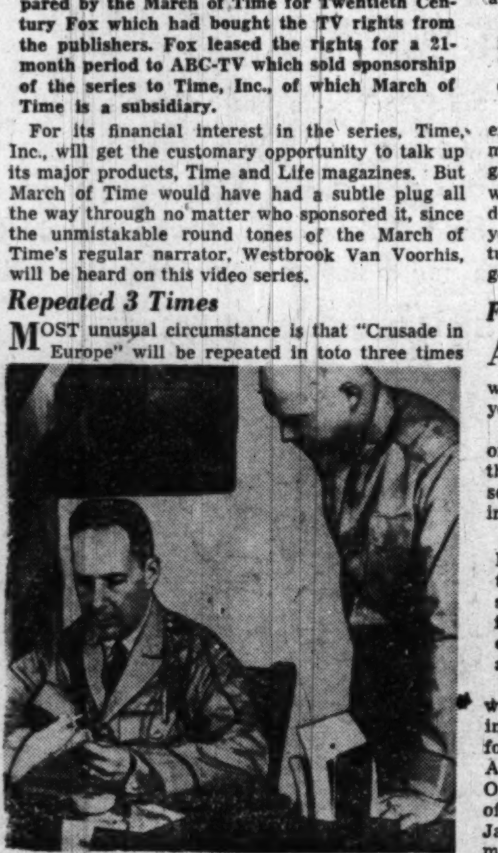
"CRUSADE IN EUROPE," the television series based on Dwight D. Eisenhower's book of that name, will make its debut Thursday at 9 p. m. amid unusual circumstances.

It will for one thing, mark the occasion on which Time, Inc., becomes its "own gran'paw." The series of war films which will run 26 weeks on ABC-TV (WMAL-TV in Washington) was prepared by the March of Time for Twentieth Century Fox which had bought the TV rights from the publishers. Fox leased the rights for a 21-month period to ABC-TV which sold sponsorship of the series to Time, Inc., of which March of Time is a subsidiary.

For its financial interest in the series, Time, Inc., will get the customary opportunity to talk up its major products, Time and Life magazines. But March of Time would have had a subtle plug all the way through no matter who sponsored it, since the unmistakable round tones of the March of Time's regular narrator, Westbrook Van Voorhis, will be heard on this video series.

Repeated 3 Times

MOST unusual circumstance is that "Crusade in Europe" will be repeated in toto three times before ABC relinquishes it. The films, which are to be shown nowhere but on television, will be shown three times on ABC-TV with a scheduled intermission of a couple of months between each series.



The only known film clip of Dwight D. Eisenhower as a colonel is included in the first chapter of the 26-week television series based on his book, "Crusade in Europe," which begins Thursday on WMAL-TV. The frame printed here shows Colonel Eisenhower assisting his boss, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, with paper work in a film sequence made for the March of Time many years ago in the Philippines

The first 26 weeks will be run on Thursday nights; the remaining two 26-week runs will probably be on other nights to increase the possible audience. Increase in set ownership in the interim is also expected to boost potential audience.

The series will, furthermore, be the first show in TV history to be available to all TV sets. Time, Inc., has ordered station time in every one of areas in the country with a TV station.

The importance of reaching a wide audience was expressed clearly enough by Richard de Rochement, top man at March of Time: "Hollywood gave us plenty of war movies while the battle was on, but since then they've been very rare indeed. The very time to see these films is when you're living in an atmosphere of peace. It's pictures such as this that will insure us against forgetting—and we really can't afford to forget."

Formidable Job

ALTHOUGH the series was prepared from film already shot— an estimated 165 million feet which would run 24 hours a day for nine solid years—the preparation was a formidable job.

Arthur Tourtellot, one of the associate producers of March of Time who was put in charge of editing this series, says he'd much rather shoot from script than make a film from existing film. "Shooting a picture is the least trouble of all."

The book was first subdivided into 26 parts by Fred Feldkamp who read through it several times before making an outline. The best possible illustrating film—some of it declassified from secret files for the first time at MOT's request—was then sorted from the mass of available film.

This project which has a number of sub-editors working under Tourtellot, has required film editing at the ratio of 5000 feet of film available to one foot used. The film, taken from the files of the Army, Navy and Air Force, the British War Office, the National Film Board of Canada, March of Time war footage and captured German, Japanese and Italian film, was first given a rough mental screening through card catalogues already available. But much of the 31,060 miles of film was actually scanned by at least one of the film editors involved. And much of the footage—1800 feet for each of the 26 20-minute sequences—has been looked at many, many times.

Puppet Show Wins Critic's High Praise

By C. E. Butterfield

NEW YORK, April 30 (AP).—Continued praise is being heaped on the puppet show, Kukla, Fran and Ollie. This is the creation of Burr Tillstrom, voice of the two principals and about a dozen other lesser puppets.

He has the important assistance of Fran Allison, who appears on the screen with the puppets and carries on with them as if they were real personalities.

The resulit is one of the smoothest and, at the same time most appealing kid shows on television. Neither rehearsal nor script is employed.

About the only preparation is a prebroadcast discussion in which Fran and Tillstrom decide the theme of their half-hour telecast, which goes on five times a week. At telecast time they just start to talk, carrying on a conversation that tells the story of some trial or tribulation of Kukla, a puppet with a big nose, and Ollie, a one-toothed dragon.

The charm of the program seems to lie in the ability of Tillstrom to convey warmth and humor through his odd-looking puppets, augmented by Fran's expert cooperation. There is little attempt at slapstick comedy.

This program was originated by WBKB, pioneer Chicago television station, from whose studios it goes to the NBC network. It is carried by other stations through film recordings.

One thing about the show: It is intended primarily for youngsters. Checkups indicate its adult audience is as large, if not larger.

IKE, From Page 1

'Crusade' Will Make TV Debut

film was silent, Kilcullen had to work over miles of sound track to find appropriate sounds to go with silent material.

Wolf Mattheissen, who with Jack Bush has been getting the films in shape for Tourtellot's final editing, scanned film 16 hours a day for four days to find a strip of film showing soldiers in the "moving-up process" on flat terrain in Italy. Eventually he found it, and it was incorporated into the film —a whole 10 seconds of it!

Except for a few sequences made now to clarify the relationship between pieces of the other film, all of it is genuine battle, MOT or newsreel material. (The only picture of Eisenhower as a colonel, which appears in the first chapter, was clipped from an old March of Time about General MacArthur with whom Eisenhower was then serving.)

The editors had less trouble than might be expected finding film that would be usable for TV's small screens. Of the captured film, the editors found German films vastly superior to Japanese.

As the film sequences were put into shape, Feldkamp wrote narration to go with them. The selections written for the TV series are read by Van Voorhis; the selections taken directly from the Eisenhower book are read by Maurice Joyce whose voice is not unlike Eisenhower's although no attempt is made at mimicry.

Behind Schedule

CONSIDERING the painstaking work involved, it's not surprising that the series, started January 1, is not yet completed. The first chapter will go on the air before the final episodes are ready. The project, first of its kind of such magnitude, has been behind schedule and over the budget all the way along. (It is being handled on a budget far lower than that for regular March of Time films.)

Time, Inc., may be getting a very good buy on the series, because according to one editor the cost of editing the film into a coherent series may ultimately cost MOT more than it will get from Fox under a contract negotiated before all aspects of such an operation were known.

If Fox passed along its saving to ABC and ABC passed it along to the sponsor, Time, Inc., may get a chance to be it's "own gran'paw" and absorb some of the shock of its loss at the same time.

The individual sequences are to run about 20 minutes, with short interviews with military men mentioned prominently in the film to be added. This, with commercials, will bring the program to 25 minutes in all.

The film sequences alone add up to almost nine hours of film time and represent the largest output of motion pictures specifically for television yet made by a motion picture company.

Olsen, Johnson May Step Into TV

Possible new talent for television is getting more and more attention these days. Latest is a report that the team of Olsen and Johnson, who at one time took a filer at radio, may step into the new medium. An assignment said to be under consideration is the summer replacement for Milton Berle on NBC.

Movie Video No Longer a Pipe Dream

THE day when the words "Television Tonight" will be glitter from the marquee of your neighborhood movie theater is not too far distant. When it arrives, the television industry, broadcasting programs for home use, may have to look to its laurels.

The idea of theater television—blowing up a television picture to fill the full screen of a motion-picture house—is not an engineers' pipedream. It has been done several times, and it represents the most effective answer yet devised by Hollywood to the fast-growing television threat.

To the worried exhibitor, who watches his attendance fall off on the Milton Berle night and whose newsreels arrives three days after a new event has been carried and rebroadcast on television at home, theater video looks like the natural out from a most uncomfortable predicament.

Large-screen television seems to have a horizon of unlimited opportunties. Its development, however, depends largely on the film industry's ability to produce a satisfactory and continuous line-up of suitable programs. Spyros P. Skouras, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, has publicly forecast the linking of hundreds and even thousands of theaters into one giant circuit, or several, carrying important telecasts simultaneously on their screens. Together they would have such tremendous financial resources that they could compete with the established networks for the rights to programs which, if acquired, would be sent directly and exclusive to their screens.

Exclusive Deals

THERE is nothing to stop such a group of theaters from obtaining exclusive rights to the World Series, for instance, or the Bowl games. They could televise elaborate stage shows from their own studios, with specially arranged big fights, concerts and operettas. Theater television eventually may serve as an entirely new system of film distribution and, beyond the horizon, there always looms the advent of color,.

How seriously the film companies are exploring this idea of combining the drawing power of movies and the comfort of their theaters with the immediacy appeal of television can be learned from the fact that such organizations as Paramount Pictures, Warner Bros. and Twentieth Century-Fox, with Radio Corp. of America, have invested hundreds of thousands of dollars in research and development of suitable equipment.

Two distinctly different systems, representing two approaches to the question, have been tested. But both are pioneering efforts into a field where laws have not yet been established and audience preference hasn't been determined.

What kind of programs will the public go for? Does a theater have the right to pick up and present a regular television broadcast intended to be received in the home? What are the rights of the sponsors, the actors, the unions and the networks? These are typical questions that remain to be answered.

Most Advanced

THE company most advanced in theater television is Paramount, with its "intermediate," or film storage, method. A specially adapted camera is focused on the face of a television monitoring tube. The film thus obtained is rapidly processed and developed and ready for running on the screen within 40 to 60 seconds. Paramount engineers have even cut the time lag as little as eight seconds.

The second method, developed under cooperative arrangements between RCA and Twentieth Century Fox, and RCA and Warner Bros. is called the instantaneous system.

It simply means that the television broadcast is enlarged and projected without any delay whatsoever onto the screen with the aid of a parabolic mirror. Each of these systems has its own advantages and disadvantages, and the equipment for both is mighty expensive, running from $25,000 to $35,000.

The Paramount method, while not strictly instantaneous, permits editing of the telecast to cut out the dull portions. And, since it is on film, it also gives the theater operator a chance to insert it at the end of a show instead of having to adjust his schedule to an outside event or to break in at the middle of a picture.

The RCA system capitalizes on the immediacy factor in television, giving the patron the feeling that he has a front-row seat while an event is happening.

Of, By the Theater

BECAUSE of legal and other difficulties, movie men believe that large-screen television will have to be from of and by the theater—that the circuits will have to build and develop their own programs which will be distributed from a central studio and will be unobtainable in homes.

They don't care for the idea of having their long-established policy of avoiding advertising on their screens.

Naturally, with 18,000 theaters in the country attracting a minimum of 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 patrons a week, sponsors look at motion-picture houses as a means of bringing news of their product to millions who ordinarily could not be reached.

On the other hand, the promoter of a sports show is unlikely to keep his demands low if he knows that the event he sponsors will be televised not only into homes but in hundreds of theaters.

Advanced Drama

"Chevrolet On Broadway," the Monday night dramatic series on NBC (WNBW), will move up half an hour to the 8 p. m. time slot starting with tomorrow's production of Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Suicide Club."

Children's Fashions

Bigwig Small Fry to Be Models

By Charles DelVecchio—The Washington Post

Fashions from everywhere are featured on "Meet Mrs. Markel" Tuesday nights at 9:30 on WTTG. This week a visiting designer from Honolulu modeled one of her own creations. Originally from Austria, "Anna of Vienna" has found inspiration in Polynesian fabrics. Hazel Markel, seated, wears one of the American hats and gowns she models as she works on her half hour interview show

FASHION always plays an important part on the Tuesday night "Meet Mrs. Markel" shows on WTTG. Tiny, red-headed Hazel Markel was both fashion model and fashion commentator when she was studying at the Sorbonne in Paris, where a French designer thought that the American girl would lend the same elan to her showings that American designers try to achieve with French models and commentators.

But this Tuesday at 9:30 p. m. (the new summer time for her show) there is something new—something big in little fashions. A new line of children's fashions will be introduced in Washington through the program and on the backs of some of Washington's top-ranking small fry.

Listed among the models are Boyden Gray, 6-year-old son of Assistant Secretary of War and Mrs. Gordon Gray; Paula and Priscilla Pace, 6 and 4, daughters of the Director of the Budget and Mrs. Frank Pace, jr.; Deborah Sullivan, 5-year-old daughter of former Secretary of the Navy John L. Sullivan; Elinor Kefauver, 7-year-old daughter of Senator Estes Kefauver; Candy Cain, 5-year-old daughter of Senator and Mrs. Harry Cain, and several children of members of the House of Representatives and members of the diplomatic set.

St. Louis Now Western Terminus

Coast-to-Coast Link Is Possible by 1952

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, April 30 (AP).—Because it's more a matter of money than engineering, coast-to-coast television still appears to be three to four years away.

The simple fact is, nobody has placed an order with the Bell Telephone System for a cross-country link. Likewise there are a number of areas now having television stations where no orders have been placed for network connections—and some of them are on existing coaxial cable routes.

Not a single television station has yet pulled out of the red ink column, and many telecasters are waiting until they can see light financially before ordering expensive network service.

Heavy Load on Cable

THE layman often thinks of television in terms of coaxial cable which is one of two means—along with microwave radio relay towers—of carrying television programs long distances. However, the coaxial cable is even more a heavy duty electronic highway for carrying tremendous loads of long distance telephone calls. And here is a fact you may not know:

New York and Los Angeles already are connected by coaxial cable. But it's equipped for television only as far as St. Louis. The remainder is so heavily loaded with telephone traffic it may never be equipped for television, and the video link to the West Coast likely will be by radio relay over a different route.

And although they aren't all official, the following other facts can be added:

1. While the networks have indicated they will be unable to pay for coast-to-coast television within the next three years, the radio relay link westward from St Louis may be required anyway to handle increased telephone traffic between the coasts. Thus the television network may ride into the West Coast on the coat-tails of long distance telephone traffic.

New West Extension

2. A radio relay link from Chicago to Des Moines has been announced as the next westward extension of the network—due to be ready in late 1950—and surveys are being made for pushing this on to Omaha. From there, the main network route probably will be by way of Denver, Salt Lake City and either San Francisco or Los Angeles—but more likely to Frisco. The new radio relay route between Los Angeles and San Francisco now is expected to be ready in time for the Rose Bowl game next New Year's Day.

3. From St. Louis, Western terminus of the present television network, a new coaxial cable has been completed to Jackson, Miss., which is on the existing Los Angeles to Atlanta coaxial cable built only for long distance telephone use. Thus coaxial cable now extends all the way from New York to Los Angeles, but the telephone company has no immediate plans to equip it for television beyond St. Louis. However there is a possibility that the link southward from St. Louis might be used to pipe television into Texas, if service should be ordered.

Here is the existing network setup: It extends southward from Boston through New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington to Richmond. From Philadelphia it extends westward to connect Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Louis, with a branch from Cleveland to Buffalo, N. Y.

New Extensions Planned

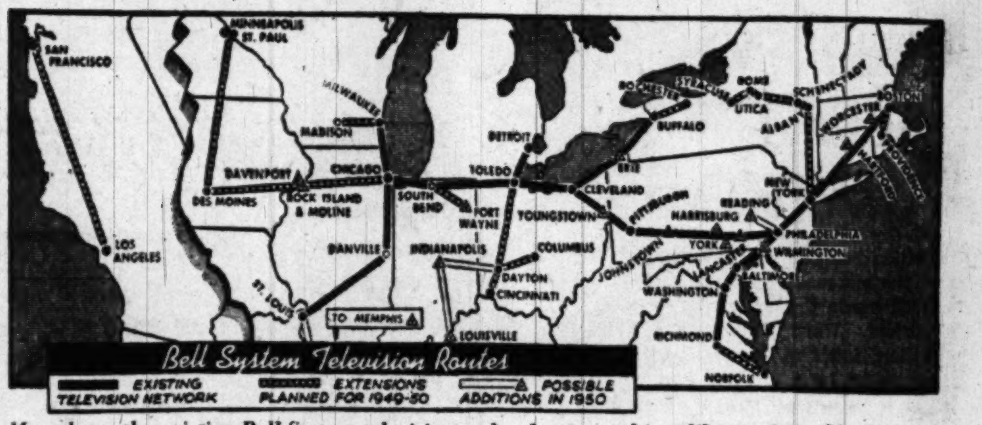
An extension from Philadelphia down to Wilmington, Del., is due to be completed by early summer. During the summer, Lancaster and Erie, Pa., are to be connected to the existing routes. By early fall a link will be dropped down from Boston to Providence, R. I.

About October, the Buffalo leg of the network is due to be extended to Rochester, and another extension southward from Toledo will connect Dayton, Columbus and Cincinnati, Ohio.

Near the end of the year the existing New York City to Albany, N. Y., coaxial cable is to be equipped for television. A radio relay extension will be opened to Syracuse, and service also will be made available to Schenectady, Rome and Utica, N. Y.

The Bell System program for this year also includes opening of two more westbound network channels from Philadelphia to Chicago May 1 in the existing coaxial cable which now carries only one television channel in each direction.

Early in 1950, Norfolk, Va., will be hooked to the network by a leg to Richmond. Johnstown, Pa., will be connected on the present East-West route.



Map shows the existing Bell System television network, the extensions planned for 1949-50 and the possible additions in 1950. Bell officials point out it's next to impossible to forecast network extensions more than a year ahead on anything like a timetable basis. First there has to be a demand for the service. Then construction plans have to be fitted in with the telephone expansion program of each area

Neckline's Important In Dressing for Video

FASHION on television is important and contrasts are frequently interesting from the visual standpoint. Jackson Weaver, announcer on the Modern Woman program on WMAL-TV, looks on while Sophia Delza, noted dancer, shows how a long black dress appears on television. Ruth Crane, who conducts the weekly half-hour program is dressed in pastel linen with lace trim. Both costumes and colors are effective for television

By Ruth Crane

Women's Director of WMAL-TV and WMAL

"WHAT shall I wear?" is the first question put to me by each of the many women who appear on the Modern Woman television programs.

A great deal has been said and printed about the kind of clothes to wear on television, but there are few hard and fast rules to follow, at least so far as color is concerned. Blacks, whites, reds, prints and satins, often warned against, may actually look very well with the proper background.

Dress design and line, on the television screen, are more important than color; a becoming neckline should have first consideration, for neckbones and muscles show up prominently. And every care should be taken to avoid a "busy" look—the fewer bows, bustles and trimmings the better. An ornament, or a scarf, can very well add interest, but drapery and floating panels will only confuse the figure line.

Pay attention to the line from hips up, for the upper part of the body is usually all that is on view. One of my best dresses was a sad disappointment on TV. I selected a gray wool with small gold metallic check, confident of my choice in fabric; the bodice was undistinguished — raglan sleeves and a surplice closing—depending for style interest on the pegtopped skirt, cleverly draped and tapered to narrow width at the hem. Seen full length the dress was high fashion . . . but seen only from hips up, through the TV camera, it was plain dowdy!

Solid colors of a medium hue, or a very small print in monotone colors, are likely to show up best against the conventional set of walls and draperies. Browns, grays, medium blues, with white touches or contrasting trim, can be counted on for good effect. A dress, being softer, is usually more becoming than a suit, and more comfortable under TV lights.

My most welcome discovery has been that a quite inexpensive dress, well designed, can look very well on TV. My pride and joy is a $14.95 chambray that passes for crepe or taffeta on the screen. I've worn it with pearls, clips and a jeweled belt; white collar and cuffs, and with various scarves.

Hats are something of a problem on TV—they may be too tall or too large or too tilted, have dangling ornaments that conceal the face, or waving feathers that distract. Masses of small blooms and veiling in the usual half-figure shot may lose their style identity altogether. Chunky, dull-finished jewelry is better than finely detailed pieces or flashing stones.

Survey Reveals Present TV Sets Good for Some Time

NEW YORK, April 30 (U.P.).—The National Better Business Bureau says that present television sets are not in any danger of becoming obsolete in the near future.

The bureau said it drew its conclusions from an investigation of the television situation, prompted by inquiries from the public and its bureaus around the country.

Kenneth B. Wilson, operating manager of the bureau, said the investigation showed:

1. Present television channels will be used indefinitely although new ultra high frequency channels may be added at a future date.

2. The network programs furnishing ultra high frequency stations will not be any different from those piped to present outlets.

Big Time TV Just 'Round The Corner

By Bob Thomas

HOLLYWOOD, April 22 (AP).—When will television become big-time? Next fall, perhaps.

That's the way it looks after a survey of TV plans of most of the big air shows. It's apparent that most of the top television talent will come from the industry's older brother, radio. Here is the latest news:

EDDIE CANTOR—Will definitely jump into TV next fall with simultaneous radio and telecast for present sponsor.

AMOS 'N' ANDY—"We are working on an unusual idea for television and hope to come up with something in the next few months."

BURNS AND ALLEN—Going to New York in June to discuss a TV deal with CBS' William Paley.

JACK BENNY—May do a monthly videocast in the fall; was happy with his debut on the local CBS station.

BING CROSBY—Definitely plans a TV show, but may wait another year; will do show on film.

BOB HOPE—Making big plans for TV; may start in fall.

DUFFY'S TAVERN—Easily adaptable to TV because of one barroom set; may wait until fall of 1950.

TRUTH OR CONSEQUENCES. Did one show here on TV; waiting until Kinescoping is better or coast-to-coast televising is possible.

RED SKELTON—M-G-M contract keeps him off TV until December, 1952.

RADIO THEATER—Not adaptable because film studios won't permit telecasting of movie stories or stars.

SCREEN GUILD players—Same.

EDGAR BERGEN—Plans a few telecasts next season; will probably be a regular in fall of 1950.

AL JOLSON—Laying plans for a minstrel show on TV.

OZZIE AND HARRIET—Have put their own children into the show, which may start in fall.

DENNIS DAY—Watching situation; may start in fall.

JUDY CANOVA—Same.

JIMMY DURANTE—Tied to MGM contract.

PEOPLE ARE FUNNY—Possibly of simultaneous TV and radio show in fall.

GROUCHO MARX—Probably not for another year; would be done on film.

FRED ALLEN—In no hurry; "let the others pioneer it."

FIBBER McGEE—Definitely interested; both son and daughter in TV field; Molly calls herself a "television widow," since Fibber spends all his time watching the screen.

MY FRIEND IRMA—All of the cast is suitable for TV, waiting for CBS go-ahead.

SPIKE JONES—Has been experimenting with show, but no commitments yet.

FAYE-HARRIS—Committed to another year of radio; perhaps TV after that.

FRANK SINATRA—Eying the field, but no plans yet.

TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT—Garry Moore thinks show readily adaptable to TV; ready to go.

There seems litle doubt that most of these names will join Milton Berle, Arthur Godfrey, Perry Como and other air stars who have already leaped into the new field. It will happen when (1) coast-to-coast telecasting comes in, (2) there are enough sets in the United States for sponsors to put out more money.

'Julius Caesar' Repeats Tonight With One Change

THE CBS-TV production of "Julius Caesar" will be repeated tonight at 7 (WOIC) in response to the approval expressed by press and public toward the first performance March 6 on CBS-TV.

With one exception, the leading players will be the same. The role of Marc Antony, originally played by Philip Bourneuf, will be played this time by Richard Hart, currently starring on Broadway in "Goodbye, My Fancy." Bourneuf is not available for the TV show.

Others in the cast include Robert Keith ("Mister Roberts"), John O'Shaughnessy ("Command Decision") and William Post, jr. (film actor).

Worthington Miner adapted the classic for television and produced the performance. Paul Nickell was director.

Shakespeare's play again will be offered in modern dress. It depicts Caesar's return to Rome, the plot of the conspirators, the asssassination and funeral, the Battle of Philippi and death of Brutus.

Television Gets Poor Government Support in France

Speaking of competition, here's a comparison of the French and U. S. television fields. The privately-owned American industry is flourishing, with well over a million sets in use.

France, where the government controls TV as well as radio, has 10,000 sets, a Paris corespondent writes. He added that the government spent about $11,000 on video in 1948. That's less than the cost of a one-hour Milton Berle show.

Strangely enough, French television is reported to have a better and clearer screen, than the U. S. but little progress is being made toward its development as an entertainment medium in France.

Godfrey Brushes Hair as Gesture to Visual Art

By John Crosby

"ARTHUR GODFREY and His Friends" is a difficult show to put a finger on because no two programs are ever quite alike. Godfrey's friends are an odd assortment, some of them bringing along a good deal of talent and others not so much.

This is an hour-long television show, which has no radio outlet whatsoever (C. B. S.-TV, 8 p. m., E. D. T., Wednesday). Someone has finally persuaded Godfrey to take his earphones off, to brush his hair and to make a few other minor concessions to this new visual art. Godfrey, though, still stays glued to that desk and in many respects his show resembles a radio program with cameras on it.

ARTHUR GODFREY

. . . a few concessions

At this stage of the art it's hard to tell where radio ends and television begins, the two at the moment being helplessly intermingled. Nevertheless, I'd like to try.

On one of these shows Godfrey introduced an actor whose name escapes me, a man who has more or less made a career out of being shot to death in B pictures. Great man for clutching his stomach, contorting his face and falling headlong into the gutter. On the Godfrey show he demonstrated a half dozen techniques for violent death used in the movies. It was a very entertaining and original business, and it was also television.

What is not television is the shot of the Mariners, a pretty good male quartet, standing in front of a camera singing "I Want a Girl Just Like the Girl That Married Dear Old Dad." That is radio, not television.

Godfrey has always had a great fondness for the old melodies and the old-style vaudeville acts. You are likely to hear a good many barber shop songs, sung by people in Gay Nineties blazers and handlebar mustaches, or see eccentric dancing of a style that hasn't been seen in these parts since pre-Jolson days.

* * * *

RECENTLY, in an attempt to get a little visual interest in one of these songs, several members of the permanent staff struck attitudes appropriate to the song, as the Mariners sang it. Reminded me of those colored slides they used to use in movie theaters while the organ played sentimental ballads.

Other acts included an acrobatic dancer and a gay and comic quartet, both of which Godfrey had apparently picked up in Florida, and songs by the regular cast—Bill Lawrence, a baby-faced crooner whom Godfrey calls C. B. S.'s answer to Margaret O'Brien, and Janette Davis, a rather tepid singer, who are also on Godfrey's morning show.

And, of course, you get plenty of pure Godfrey, a man with an infectious grin and a perfectly wonderful speaking voice. Godfrey occasionally sings, plays the ukelele, fiddles around with Lionel trains or odd inventions that his listeners send in, and sometimes pokes fun at William S. Paley or at his sponsors.

The Godfrey humor is, as usual, easy-going adult stuff, but on this show it's quite a lot broader than that of his radio shows. Some of it, in fact, gets pretty close to the border line of good taste.

Even with Mr. G.'s million-dollar personality on it, this program is too long, too aimless and too slow for my taste. It's my hunch that the Godfrey personality is going to become wearing on television about four times as fast as it did on radio, and that he ought to husband it carefully in this medium.

Tune Him Back In With an Aspirin

During rehearsals of CBS' "Talent Scouts," Arthur Godfrey showed the crew a fan letter he received: "I sure enjoyed you on television but I'm afraid I won't see you any more. I've decided to go on the wagon."

Mutual Is Set to Speed Up TV Programs

NEW YORK, April 30 (AP).—The Mutual network, which so far has not been active in television programming, expects to remedy that situation by the end of May. The two stations owned by its New York City key, WOR, are expected to be in operation then.

These, MBS says, will form "the first leg of the projected television network in the East." Of the two units, WOIC of Washington, has been on the air for several months. The other, WOR-TV in New York, is expected to open June 1 after the usual test period.

Ultimately it is the intention to take in stations of other affiliates, among which are WNAC-TV of Boston and WGN-TV of Chicago. A West Coast affiliate active in television is the Don Lee network, which operates KTSL at Los Angeles.

When MBS finally gets into television, that will make five networks in the picture field.

The delay experienced by MBS in getting started, has been attributed to the fact that telestations of its affiliates either have not been so quick in getting on the air or have not been situated where they could be served by network program material.

TV Antenna To Rise Atop The Palisades

WOR-TV, the New York television station with which WOIC is to be linked to form the nucleus of a TV network owned by Mutual affiliates, is expected to be on the air by midsummer, possibly sooner.

WOR, which owns both the New York and Washington TV stations, has announced that the antenna for WOR-TV will tower 1050 feet above sea level. The steel tower on which the antenna is to be mounted is under construction at North Bergen, N. J., on the rim of the Palisades, 240 feet above the Hudson River opposite Manhattan. The tower itself will be 760 feet and the antenna will rise another 50 feet.

The tower is to be the highest structure built in the New York area since the RCA Building was completed in 1933. It will be higher than the Eiffel Tower in Paris and within 200 feet of the height of the Empire State Building—the world's tallest.

The structure is expected to use 840,000 pounds of steel.

Theodore Streibert, president of WOR, has said that the location and height of the tower would give the new video station "a maximum clarity of reception in the New York area."

Excited Boy Throws Toy at TV Set—Misses

Television can be dangerous, Bill Holden reports. His kids are avid fans and never miss Hopalong Cassidy on Sundays. One day Hoppy was being throttled by the villain. One of the young Holdens got so excited he threw his toy gun at the TV set. Luckily he missed and only dented the plaster.

Better Aerials May Avoid Installation Cost

IF YOU'RE under the impression that people who live on wages and salaries are buying more television sets than rich folks, you're right.

For proof, all you have to do is ride through the outskirts of any city with television. You'll see many more antennas sprouting from roofs of small homes than from mansions.

The statistics are equally conclusive. The Baxter International Research Bureau of New York says at least half of the people who have been buying television sets are in the lower income brackets. It quotes a survey in New York City showing 54 per cent going to families with $3000 or less a year.

And if you push the bracket up to $5000 a year—not quite $100 a week—you account for 88 per cent of sales in the big town. Less than 12 per cent, it shows, are going to families making more than $5000 a year.

A survey by Sylvania Electric Products Co. in eight television areas showed 77 per cent of potential television buyers were families with incomes of $100 a week or less.

Television set makers express no surprise that the bulk of buying is by low and middle income families. They say these groups are the ones who have most to gain from television.

S. W. Gross, president of Tele-Tone Radio Corp., of New York, puts it this way: People with high incomes have plenty of money to spend on entertainment. Tickets to a championship prize fight, the World Series, or a Broadway play are no financial problem, but the middle and low income groups who would have trouble getting up the prices of tickets, can watch on television.

Gross has geared his company's entire production for the mass market with sets in low price brackets. He is hopeful that more sensitive sets and improved indoor aerials will soon make it unnecessary for the purchaser to pay an extra $45 to $65 for installation and service.

Dick Tracy Deal

NBC is negotiating for a combination radio-television program based on the Dick Tracy comic strip. Present plans call for a once-weekly 30-minute radio show and a 15-minute teleshow once a week. Ralph Byrd, who played the Tracy role in moving pictures, will have the title role in the radio-video series.

TV Now Heavy User of Film For Relaying of Programs

TELEVISION has become a heavy user of motion picture film—not necessarily of the movie theater type, although it does consume a lot of that.

Primarily it uses film it makes itself as a means of passing programs from station to station in addition to network relaying.

So much has this new activity developed that one network, NBC, reports its present output at the rate of 700 films hours a year, equivalent to about 470 feature length movies.

Cost of the film equipment it uses in New York was placed by NBC at $250,000. It is setting up another recording unit in Hollywood.

The copy of a television show is made at the same time it goes on the air. The film can be ready as quickly as 15 minutes after the telecast. Extra prints are easily produced.

FCC Policy, Technical Factors Seen Delaying Coverage

DALLAS W. SMYTHE, former assistant chief accountant in charge of economics and statistics for the Federal Communications Commission, said in an article recently that "full coverage by 'TV' awaits solution of two major problems."

The article, published in Current Economic Comment, said one obstacle is technical development. The other is undetermined policy by the FCC for assignment of "high band" channels.

The FCC must decide, Smythe said, whether these channels are to be used for "color television, black and white television with improved definition, or black and white transmission of present standards."

Smythe said there are now 57 TV stations operating in the United States, and 67 more are under construction. The FCC is holding up 313 applications for new stations until interference problems between present stations can be solved.

Smythe said he thinks "low band" television will continue to be limited largely to urban areas, and 12 States with a total 1948 population of about 12 million may not even have one television station.

When "high band" channels are assigned for commercial use, he said, they probably will go to broadcasters in smaller cities than those now being served. He said he thinks "high band" channels will be allocated within the next year or two.

Capsule Review: "Bridge of Vengeance" deals with the poisoning Borgias in fairly lively style. Despite the frilly production, it's interesting stiletto-and-strychnine stuff. John Lund shines in the role Ray Milland refused and MacDonald Carey is convincingly sinister. Paulette Goddard suffers from bad photography.

WOIC Is Adding Two Shows T morrow

WOIC Sports Editor Jim Simpson has been assigned to handle a series of programs featuring late scores and general sporting news—starting at 1 p. m. and running for 10 minutes every half hour until 6 p. m., Monday through Friday.

A native Washingtonian, Simpson attended Woodrow Wilson High School, Devitt Prep and George Washington University. Contender for the title of "Washington's Youngest Sportscaster," he first entered radio in 1942 (WINX) at 14. From WINX he journeyed forth to stations in Portsmouth, N. H., and Salisbury, Md., before coming home to inaugurate an all-afternoon sports special on WGAY, Silver Spring.

Simpson then went to a station in Hagerstown, Md., where he handled play-by-play accounts of Class B baseball, and Maryland University's football and basketball games. During his stay in Hagerstown he substituted on occasion for sports authority Joe Hasel, on the American Broadcasting Co. network. Simpson joined WOIC in December of '48.

In addition to handling his new afternoon assignment, he is also featured on special 10-minute sports roundups immediately preceeding WOIC sign-off time nightly.

"PETTICOAT PARADE," a new five-minute show, beamed at women and featuring the way modern appliances can benefit them in terms of better health, more youthful appearance and added hours of leisure, will make its debut on Television Station WOIC tomorrow.

Scheduled for the 7:55-8 period, Mondays, "Petticoat Parade" is on film and is produced in Hollywood.

Gabfest between Luke, husky, half-grown boxer puppy, and Laure, young daughter of a surgeon, began after Luke had twice knocked down new friend.

GIRL AND BOXER GET ACQUAINTED

And in 30 minutes they become fast friends

SMALL CHILDREN and dogs, child psychologists will tell you, have a good deal in common. Healthy specimens of both are curious, uninhibited, robustly destructive, unsure of their movements and forthright in speech.

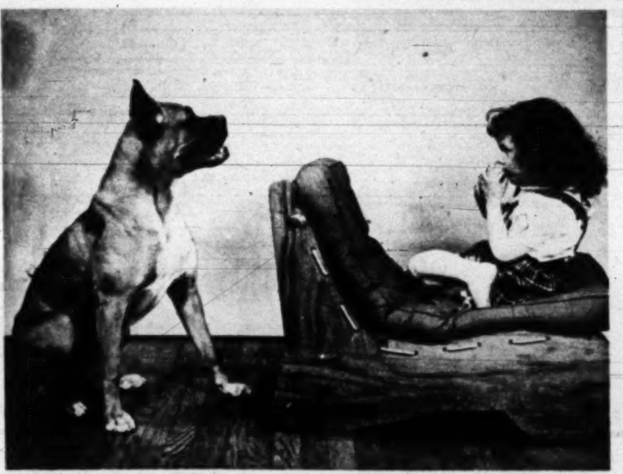
Recently three-year-old Laure Fox and Luke, a ten-month-old boxer puppy, held a get-together at the home of Ylla, distinguished New York animal photographer. It was a meeting which would be the delight of psychologists—and the despair of parents—anywhere.

Introduced, both Laure and Luke were at first wary, then curious, and finally delighted with each other's company. At parting, 30 minutes later, they had become friends for life.

For photographer Ylla, the show was much too good to miss. She preserved it on film, with the happy results that you see on these pages.

Laure takes spill when affectionate Luke gives her friendly push with paw.

Then, to show he didn't mean it, Luke plays dead, waves paws prayerfully.



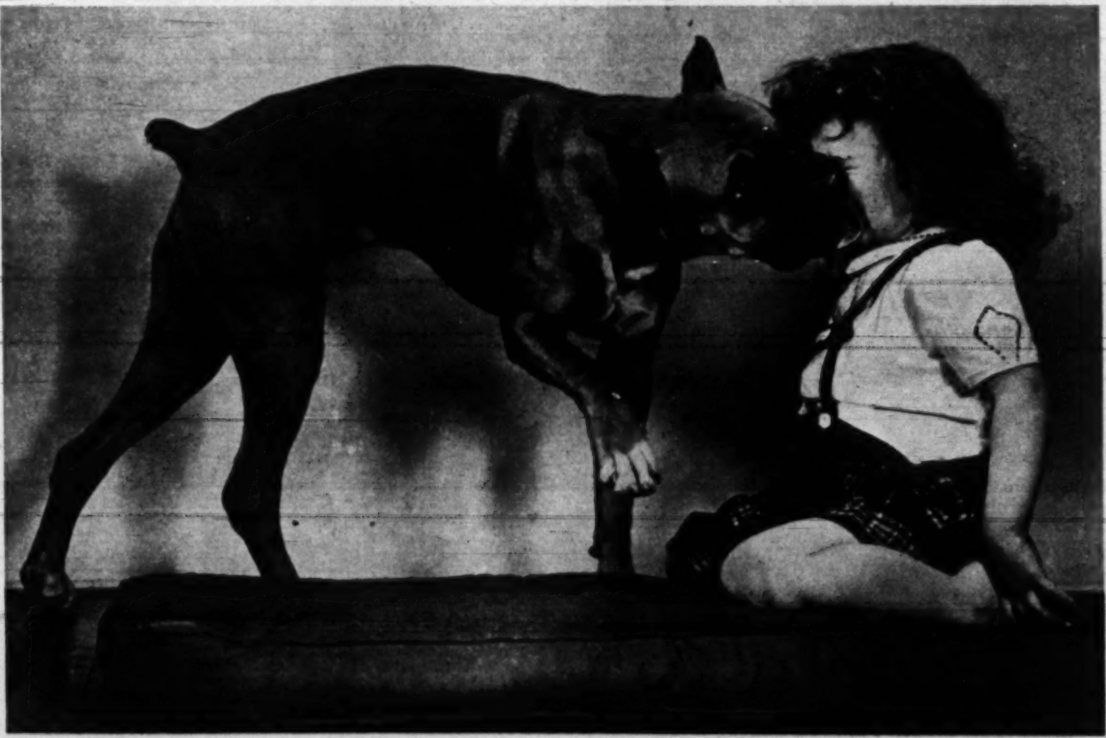
Behind chair barrier, Laure sceptically views Luke.

But this mood melts when Luke finds hiding place.

The barrier dissolves when he mounts back of chair.

Now sharing chair, he watches her consume a cookie.

Their friendship established, Laure offers now passive Luke a share in her tea-time refreshments.



And just to show that he didn't mean to act tough, he makes amends by giving her a watery kiss.

The Hartmans are just as funny as ever on television show

Grace and Paul Hartman, Broadway dancing team, now have husband-and-wife TV show.

Confronted by wash basin surrounded by beauty aids, Paul wails, "How can I wash?"

Paul offers to look up a number for Grace. "What name?" he asks. "Just 'Alice'" she says.

Suitcase packing routine, a Hartman standby, is just as funny as ever over NBC show for Textron.

The Turning Point

In Paris, he heard Berlin . . .

Andre Kostelanetz

Listening to "A Pretty Girl," he got some new ideas

BEFORE HE WAS 21, Andre Kostelanetz had distinguished himself in European music circles as a conductor of opera. But he might never have become an American conductor if he hadn't stopped in a Parisian record shop one day in 1922. Browsing through the discs he came across Irving Berlin's "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody."

"I had heard of Irving Berlin, of course," recalls Kostelanetz, "but I wasn't interested in that kind of music in those days. I was a thorough-going 'longhair.'

"Mildly curious, I decided to play the record. Then and there something happened to me which influenced my entire life. I suddenly grasped the real meaning of American popular music with which I had just come in contact for the first time."

Soon after the record-shop experience, Kostelanetz came to New York. Although trained in classical music, he studied and played the songs of Berlin, George Gershwin, Jerome Kern, Richard Rodgers and others. The more familiar he became with them, the more certain he was that this type of music deserved serious attention.

As a result Kostelanetz performed American popular music with the same seriousness he gave Tchaikovsky, Beethoven, Brahms. Other conductors followed suit. Soon Toscanini included works by Gershwin and Grofe in his repertoire. So did Ormandy, Stokowski and others.

Acceptance by artists like these has dignified and broadened American popular music. In substantial part it stems from the chance encounter of a young classical musician with one of Irving Berlin's hit tunes.

Biggest oil drilling rig in the Gulf of Mexico rises 225 feet out of water 48 feet deep. Oil is sucked from a well 9,000 feet down.

Oil From The Gulf

Oil drillers march right out into the Gulf of Mexico in a search of new supplies

IT COSTS $1,000,000 to sit in the gambling game being played in the Gulf of Mexico.

The stakes are oil—billions of barrels of it in the submerged floor of the Continental Shelf which slopes for miles off the Louisiana coast before it drops sharply away.

The gamblers in the huge corporate poker game are U. S. oil companies. Twenty years ago they suspected the existence of this fabulous wealth below the Gulf's floor. About ten years back its presence was established by geologists.

Except during the war, the oil industry has been spending millions for Gulf bottom leases, above-water surveys and drillings. Some operations have been successful, others have not. But since the only way to get oil is to drill for it, the game goes on, from barges and stationary platforms.

The largest of these (above), with more than an acre of deck space (45,320 square feet) was built last year by the nation's largest producer of crude petroleum, the Humble Oil and Refining Co. of Houston, Tex.

This giant rig, ten times bigger than any other previously built in Gulf waters, is located eight miles south of Grand Isle, La. It cost $1,200,000.

Erected on steel pilings driven from 147 to 197 feet into the Gulf floor, the 10,000-000-pound structure was built to withstand the worst weather the Gulf could blow up.

With living quarters for 54 oil workers and one doctor, and with its own commissary, kitchen, dining quarters, offices, library and recreation rooms, the Grand Isle rig is a self-contained city. Men alternate three days aboard and ashore, work 40 hours during shift.

Production Still Low

While it produces only 228 barrels a day (U.S. production is 5,000,000 a day) Humble figures the ante is a good bet. Despite all odds against construction and operation of such an immense installation, the company brought it off and now has the know-how. In the tough, go-ahead oil industry, that's the nearest thing you can ever have to a pat hand.

A patient at Fort Snelling Veteran's Hospital in Minneapolis, wounded veteran Marvin Anderson visits the school he once attended in Trenton, Wis. Anderson's left knee was shattered in the Battle of the Bulge.

The Case of Marvin Anderson

"I started going through hospitals so fast, I never knew where I really was"

By EDWARD J. NICKEL and SID ROSS

"I didn't feel a thing. All I knew I felt myself being knocked off my feet, and then I blacked out. When I came to a few seconds later, I was lying on my side. I looked down my body, and I could see the blood coming fairly heavy from my left knee. I knew that I was wounded."

IT WAS A COLD afternoon in Luxembourg—"You never really knew what time it was except that it was light and dark"—when Pfc. Marvin Anderson, Co. G., 319th Infantry, ran into the chunk of German steel.

Today, four years, four months, one day and 13 surgical operations later, 29-year-old Marvin Anderson is still a patient at the Fort Snelling Veterans Administration Hospital in Minneapolis. The hard, heavy cast on his left leg, the ever-present crutches, are cruel souvenirs of the Battle of the Bulge.

Statistically, hospital patient Anderson is only one of 668,653 Americans wounded in World War II. To a forgetful and even callous public, his ordeal may seem merely a personal aftermath of a war that is already receding into the mists of the past. Yet to Marvin Anderson, World War II is very real, and so are his own unstinted sacrifices.

For him the war began matter-of-factly in July, 1942, when he left his $80-a-month job with Jake's Seed Corn Co. in Prescott, Wis., to enter the Army. It languished through two years of training camp, and first came alive when he waded ashore in France on an August morning in 1944. It reached its climax four months later on a Luxembourg hillside when a German artillery shell exploded.

The Operations Begin

Marvin was carried to an aid station where his wound was dressed and a temporary splint applied. The next move was to the 94th Evacuation Hospital in France. There, he underwent an emergency operation on his shattered knee. It was to be the first in a long series.

"I started going through hospitals so fast, I never knew where I was," he recalls today.

That first operation was quickly followed by four more at the 110th General Hospital just outside of London. In April, 1945, Marvin was loaded into a hospital plane and flown to Mitchel Field, N. Y.

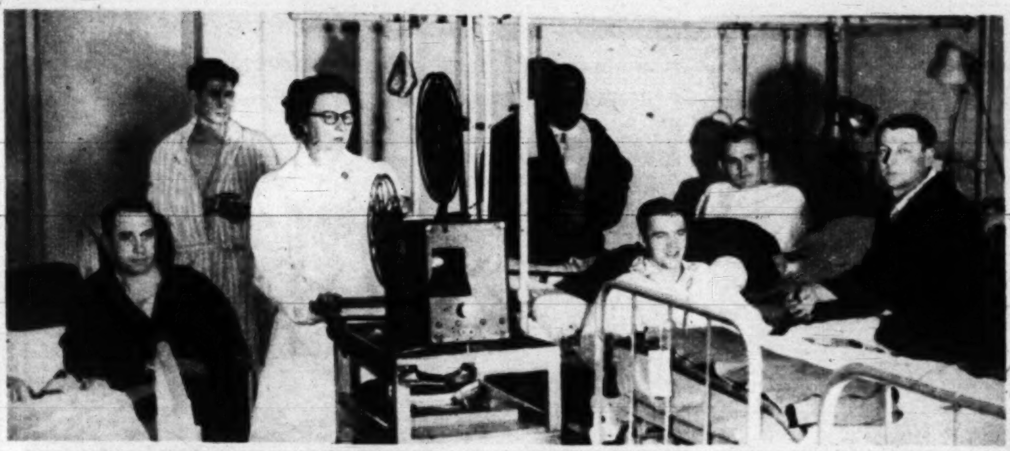
Next stop was the Winter General Hospital in Topeka, Kan. (two operations), followed by transfers to the Mayo General Hospital, Galesburg, Ill. (two more) and the Percy Jones Hospital in Battle Creek, Mich.

At Percy Jones, the doctors decided that Marvin would have to undergo still another operation on his shattered knee.

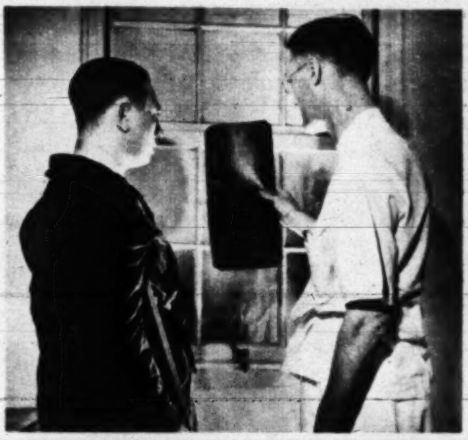
"By this time, I was good and sick of operations. I had had nine already and dreaded another one. I wondered if they'd ever finish. But it had to be done."

The tenth operation over, Marvin was given a furlough with the understanding that when he returned he would undergo another, and what the doctors hoped would be the final operation, to "fuse" the knee so that it would be completely stiff. Thus, even though the entire leg would be inflexible, Marvin could walk again. There would be no pain or irritation.

"When I came back, I felt so good that the doctors kind of agreed, too, that I could take my discharge, and that if the knee started acting up again I should go to the nearest veterans' hospital. In the end they gave me my discharge from the Army on October 26, 1947.



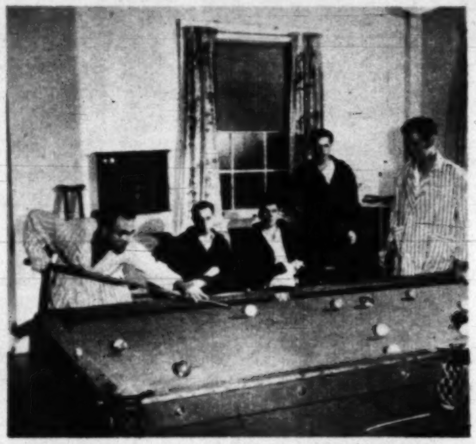
Movies are one form of recreation at Fort Snelling Hospital. Anderson (left), who can get around with aid of crutches, drops in on a ward showing staged for patients who are wholly bedridden.



With aid of an X-ray plate, Dr. Hollis Ahrlin describes the condition of knee to Marvin Anderson.

Anderson has had 13 operations since he was wounded, the last three at Fort Snelling Hospital.

Visit from Red Cross "Gray Lady" Mrs. Ralph Harford enables Anderson to order new razor.



A pool game in the hospital's Special Services Building attracts Anderson and other spectators.

Doctors fit him with walking cast. Eventually he will require only a special shoe to walk.

In his spare time, Anderson putters with watches. He wants to study watch repairing, be a jeweler.

On leave from the hospital, veteran Marvin Anderson visits his mother in Prescott, Wis. Pictures of brothers, sisters and their families line the room.

Since he already had a car, Anderson sold his government purchased "amputee's car." An automatic clutch enables him to drive with ease.

On the old farm in Trenton, Wis., where he was born, Anderson looks over a two-day-old calf with farmer Albert Girdeen, present owner.

Marvin Anderson has a future

WHEN HE GOT HIS DISCHARGE from the Army, Marvin Anderson went back to Prescott, Wis., to live with his mother. He even returned for a short time to his old job with Jake's Seed Corn Co.

"After a few days I had to quit, my leg was giving me such pain. I was no good again."

On August 16, 1948, Marvin entered the Fort Snelling Veterans Administration Hospital. "The doctors examined me, and told me the facts," says Marvin. The facts added up to three more operations. While having them, Marvin has had plenty of time to think about himself, his future—and other veterans in like plight.

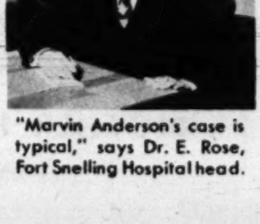
All his life Marvin had wanted to be a farmer. At 14, he had quit school to work as a hired hand for $15 a month.

"I had a bad time keeping my mind on studying. Things were pretty tough at home, and I guess I wasn't cut out for school.

"I didn't know how to dance much," says Marvin of his youth. "And I never did any drinking. The folks were pretty strict about this. (To this day, Marvin does not touch liquor. Only recently he learned to smoke. 'One or two cigarettes a day, just to keep me calm after lying in bed.')

"I wasn't too interested in girls, either. I could never seem to get started with them. I probably was a little bashful, you know."

Before the war, Marvin had never been more than 50 miles from home. "It was like a great education to be thrown together with all kinds of people. I learned it was a real big country."



"Marvin Anderson's case is typical," says Dr. E. Rose, Fort Snelling Hospital head.

When Marvin speaks, he speaks slowly, carefully formulating his thoughts. His carefully chosen words carry conviction.

"Marvin is one of the most well-adjusted persons that I have ever seen," says Dr. Hollis Ahrlin of the hospital staff. "He wouldn't sacrifice that leg for gold. Another man might have given up.

"He's a good kid. He's friendly, he's open, he's cheerful. Whenever we've had a vacancy in his room, we've had men come to us and ask if they could move in."

Two months ago, Marvin went on his thirteenth trip to the operating room for the removal of a bone splinter.

"That one was nothing at all," he laughs. "By next fall, or even late this summer, I'll be standing on my own two feet. Without casts and crutches and canes—nothing—not even a brace! I feel like a whole new life is beginning again."

Meanwhile, for Marvin and the more than 900 other patients at the Fort Snelling Hospital, life is pretty much routine.

He shares Room 411 with another World War II veteran, Paul Tufte of Northfield, Minn. Marvin's portable radio rests on a bedside stand. On a shelf beneath, he keeps his letters and snapshots, toilet articles, underwear and a few candy bars. Downstairs, in the baggage room, Marvin has a suit, a coat and a shirt. He calls for them when he leaves the hospital, which is every weekend now that the weather is mild.

To the Canteen for Coffee

EACH morning, Marvin and his buddies visit the Canteen in the basement of an adjoining building for coffee. He makes his own bed and eats in the dining room two floors below.

"I'm a real chow hound," he grins.

After lunch he usually naps. Then he may take out a few old watches and putter around. For Marvin, now unable to satisfy his life-long desire to be a farmer, plans to become a watchmaker. He keeps a few tools in a cardboard box and studies from a text borrowed from the hospital library.

In the evening, there is usually a show in the Special Services Building. Sometimes Marvin just sits around and talks.

"I've made a lot of friends here. They're all good fellows, and I enjoy their company. They don't gripe much." Marvin Anderson strolls with neighbor Mary Mae Anderson of Trenton, Wis. They attended same school and corresponded when he was in Army.

Anderson drops in on his brother Reuben and his sister-in-law Gladys who live in Minneapolis not too far from Fort Snelling Hospital is devoid of bitterness. "They've done everything possible to restore my leg. These doctors are the best I have ever run into. I have all the faith in the world in them."

As a disabled veteran, Marvin receives a monthly allowance of $152.40 from the Veterans Administration. Two years ago, he received a so-called "amputee's" automobile. If he goes to school, the V.A. will pay the costs.

Right now, the hospital's cast and brace shop is working on a brace and special shoe for Marvin. It will replace his present "walking cast." As his leg gets stronger, he'll be able to discard the brace. The special shoe and a stiff leg will be his only permanent souvenirs of Luxembourg.

"Now I have a future. I intend to go to watch-repair school and open a little jewelry shop of my own in some small town in Minnesota or Wisconsin. If the war hadn't come along, I'd be a farmer today. But the war did happen, and I did get hurt. You certainly can't take back what happened. I can't say that my life has been ruined. I still have a lot of life ahead of me."

VETERANS ADMINISTRATOR CARL GRAY SAYS: "The story of veteran Marvin Anderson is typical of the individual stories of the more than 96,000 patients now undergoing treatment in the 126 veterans' hospitals across the nation. Every American owes them a debt that can only partially be repaid.

"Nothing can be done to restore a lost leg or give sight to a blinded veteran. But as these men return to their communities, they will need opportunities to prove themselves. Americans can in part repay their debt to disabled veterans by recognizing their abilities and providing opportunities for them to prove their genuine worth in jobs suited to their talents."

A new life: Soon, veteran Marvin Anderson hopes to put down his crutches and quit the hospital for good. Though he will always have a stiff leg, need a special shoe, he will be able to walk unaided.

Bargain Paradise: Haitian vacationists Skye Patrick and Martha Strasser drag palm frond to use as beach mat on tropical sands nine hours by air from New York.

Holiday in Haiti

A tropic paradise is only four hours' flight from U. S.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ALLAN GOULD

VACATION-PLANNING AMERICANS yearning for lush and exotic foreign lands but without the lush and exotic bank accounts usually needed to reach them, have been overlooking an ideal spot almost on their own doorstep.

Haiti, 600 miles southeast of Florida (about the distance between Chicago and Philadelphia) has been avoided as a land of voodoo, zombies, and natives who put the whammy on strangers.

To prove that Haiti has a lot more than black magic, PARADE dispatched a lissome Powers model named Skye Patrick to explore the vacation possibilities.

The possibilities are impressive. Guided by experienced Haiti-vacationist Martha Strasser, of Tucson, Ariz., met accidentally in a Port-au-Prince hotel, Miss Patrick had a complete one-week vacation in a land that is a mixture of Africa, Majorca, and the Riviera for about what it would cost for the boat ride alone to any of them.

Paradise Close at Hand

Round-trip fare via Pan-American airline is only $198 plus 15 per cent tax from New York City by way of Miami. The flight takes only nine hours from New York, four and a half from Miami.

If time is not important, freighters of the French Line will take you down in five days for $100. Auto owners can take their cars with no extra permits for stays of up to 90 days.

Proof of American citizenship is the only requirement for stays up to a month.

It's here a year ahead!

Wish you could fix up your living room?

See what we did for $198 plus a new rug and a plan… thanks to Alexander Smith

Mary Jean Barnett of Indianapolis tells how the Barnetts dressed up a drab room
..with an Alexander Smith Rug and a decorating plan from Clara Dudley, your color-scheme consultant at Alexander Smith.

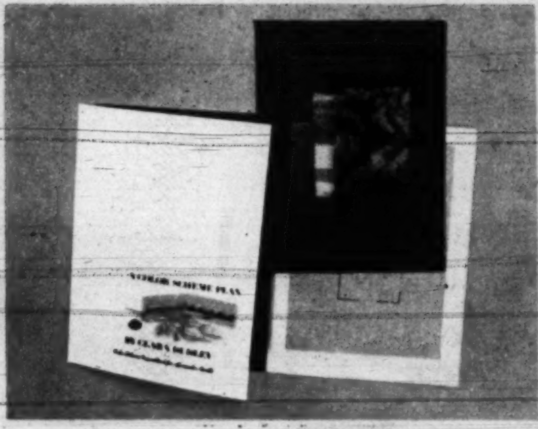
Copyright 1949, Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Co.

See how shabby our room looked! Faded walls. Beaten furniture. No rug. Because we danced our old rug into holes, Mother threw it out. I was desperate then. My new decorating studies at Broad Ripple High made me itch all the more to take away the room's grim look. When Mother and I tackled Dad, he agreed the room needed fixing.

Mother suggested that we begin with our rug. "Jean has learned that all re-decorating should start with your rug," she explained to Dad. The next Saturday we all visited Simpson & Miller's store here in Indianapolis. They had a fascinating selection of rugs to choose from.

We fell hard for a Floor-Plan Rug from Alexander Smith. One of those marvelous broadloom rugs, ready-made in so many sizes that you can get the right fit for practically any size room. Our 9′ x 18′ cost $164.50. $32 down and the balance monthly if we wanted terms. The salesman suggested we fill out Clara Dudley's Workshop Questionnaire.

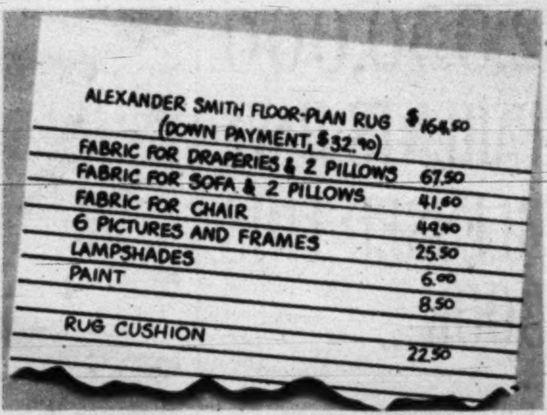


That Workshop Questionnaire brought this personal portfolio. It contained a plan worked out just for us, with actual samples.

We're a team. I helped Dad paint the walls a dreamy dark green, a perfect match for the shade found in the new rug pattern.

Mother sewed like fury. That wonderful wall of drapery Miss Dudley suggested had her humming. We could hardly wait for it!

What a "five-star final" when we rolled the new rug out! Mother agreed with Clara Dudley: a new rug gives your room new life.



ALEXANDER SMITH FLOOR-PLAN RUG (DOWN PAYMENT, $32.90)	$164.50
FABRIC FOR DRAPERIES & 2 PILLOWS	67.50
FABRIC FOR SOFA & 2 PILLOWS	41.60
FABRIC FOR CHAIR	49.90
6 PICTURES AND FRAMES	25.50
LAMPSHADES	6.00
PAINT	8.50
RUG CUSHION	22.50

Dad figured the cost of our fixings and admitted it was less than he anticipated. That inspiring Workshop Portfolio helped plenty!

Wouldn't you be proud of this room? I adore it all. But most of all, I love the beautiful, new Alexander Smith Rug which started us off. It's so beautiful, so luxurious looking. Dad says it's a good investment. With its all-wool pile, it will last for years. And doesn't it dress up the whole room!

Let Clara Dudley help you! Could you dream the Barnetts could do so much for so little? Why not see what you can do with Clara Dudley's help. Go to your favorite store. Buy your Alexander Smith Rug or Carpet. Ask for Clara Dudley's Workshop Questionnaire. Or mail this coupon . . . today!

For Mother's Day, a bevy of easy-to-make sweets all based on the same recipe.

Sweets for Mother

NEXT SUNDAY is Mother's Day. Flowers, of course, and gifts galore for the First Lady of our hearts. Among them should be at least one present made with our own hands. It seemed to us that this versatile recipe for Chocolate Marshmallows would fill the bill. Make it as a candy, cut in squares and coated with crushed nutmeats. Or use part of it this way and make the rest into a filling for a luscious pie or cake or dainty cookie sandwiches. Mother will be delighted with a dessert she didn't have to make herself! If you use a packaged mix for the pie shell or cake layers, your work will be greatly simplified and results will be all you wish.

Chocolate Marshmallows

1 envelope unflavored gelatine
⅓ cup cold water
½ cup sugar
⅔ cup light corn syrup
1 teaspoon vanilla
3 squares unsweetened chocolate
¾ cup finely chopped peanuts

Soften gelatine in cold water; place over boiling water and stir until dissolved. Add sugar; stir until dissolved. Remove from heat. Place corn syrup and vanilla in large bowl of electric mixer. Add gelatine-sugar mixture and beat on highest speed until mixture becomes thick and of soft marshmallow consistency, about 15 minutes. While mixture is beating, melt chocolate; cool. When marshmallow consistency is reached, fold in cool, melted chocolate by hand. Pour into greased pan, preferably about 7" by 10" by 1½". Smooth off top with spoon or knife. Let stand in a cool place (not a refrigerator) until well set, about 1 hour. To remove from pan, loosen around the edges and invert on waxed paper. Cut into 1-inch squares with knife moistened with cold water. Roll in finely chopped peanuts. Yield: about 1½ pounds.

Here Are Some Variations

Chocolate Marshmallow Pie: Fold 1 cup heavy cream, whipped, into 2 cups marshmallow mixture. Spoon into 9-inch baked pastry shell. Chill until firm.

Chocolate Marshmallow Cake Filling: Fold ½ cup heavy cream, whipped, into 1 cup marshmallow mixture. Use as filling for layer cake. Use rest of marshmallow mixture as candy, or as filling for cookie sandwiches. Either way, you'll delight Mother with the result.

1. When candy is set, remove from pan, cut into squares, add peanuts.

2. Spread mixture between layers. For design, sift sugar through doily.

3. Spread surplus chocolate between not-too-sweet cookies for sandwiches.

Making science live: Dr. Paul Brandwein, head of the science department at Forest Hills High School, Forest Hills, N.Y., starts a fire by applying water to sawdust containing sodium peroxide.

SCIENCE COMES ALIVE

In Forest Hills, new methods give it new vitality

By KARL KOHRS

IS there as much Vitamin C in canned tomato juice as in fresh?

How does air change chemically as it is drawn into the lungs and then exhaled?

Questions like these have been asked high school science students for decades. Depending upon the skill of the teacher, the brightness of the youngsters, and the lucidity of the text book, the students get the answers right, partly right, or dead wrong.

But lately there's been a major revolution in science classrooms — at least in those of the Forest Hills High School in Forest Hills, L. I., a New York suburb.

There, the 2,100 youngsters enrolled in science courses don't learn the answers to such questions by rote from a textbook cobwebbed with scientific jargon.

They learn the answers by running their own experiments — and just as often as not they perform a successful experiment before their class, and thus become teachers. For them, science has come brilliantly alive.

"Science is doing," explains Dr. Paul F. Brandwein, head of the science department. "We don't believe in chalk talks. We believe in doing." The result is that Forest Hills youngsters learn science fast and well, and have fun while doing it.

Dr. Brandwein, who has been department head since the school opened in 1941, organized its science courses with "doing" as the major objective. His innovations have already begun to affect teaching methods in schools throughout the nation.

Science Is Popular

At Forest Hills High School today, there are 16 teachers on the staff, each with at least a master's degree in some branch of science. Over two-thirds of the total enrollment of the school—high above the national average—are taking science. Many youngsters take it a full four years, then go on to major in scientific fields in college.

The success of the Forest Hills course in terms of solid learning is best illustrated by the fact that the school, since 1941, has placed 10 students in the annual Science Talent Search of the Westinghouse Educational Foundation. It rates highest of any general high school in the nation in placing youngsters in The Talent Search.

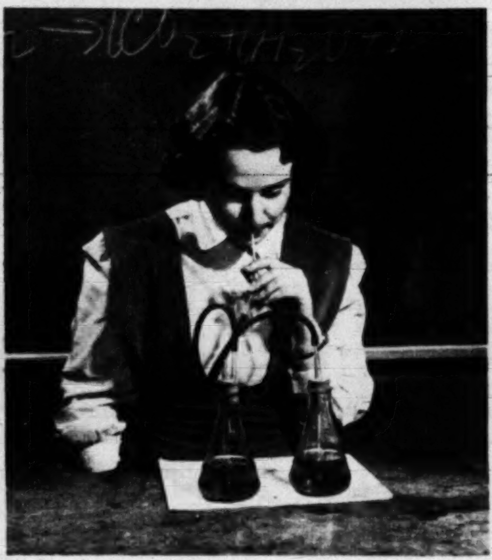
Forest Hills High School students prepare laboratory equipment for physics class work on flotation.



In demonstration, as student exhales, dye in water changes color showing presence of carbon dioxide.

Students tell members of general science class how to make a simple fire extinguisher with sulphuric acid, sodium bicarbonate. Combined, the chemicals give off carbon dioxide which smothers flames.

The importance of Dr. Brandwein's innovations in teaching go far beyond the comparatively narrow boundaries of Forest Hills and Long Island, however.

For although we have now almost completed the fourth year of the atomic age, American educators are becoming increasingly concerned at the general drop in the number of students studying high school science.

It is, of course, from such classrooms as those at Forest Hills that the scientists of tomorrow will come. And to have a lasting shortage of scientists would be a perfectly efficient form of national suicide.

Educators feel, too, that such things as atomic energy are everybody's business, not just that of specialists. It goes almost without saying that the high school student who has been made aware of the social implications of the physical sciences is a better citizen, and a better leader in his community.

To meet these needs, Dr. Brandwein and his associates have sought to revitalize the teaching of science. In the past, they feel, it has suffered because of dry-as-dust textbooks, and because of uninspired, dogmatic instruction.

In contrast, the Forest Hills technique of "doing" provides a stimulating environment for youngsters studying science.

Students who expect to continue science study at the college level receive one type of instruction, those who will have no more science after high school another.

For all, however, there are dramatic practice demonstrations. There are science service squads of students who set up and dismantle laboratory equipment for others during study periods. Students plan and create innumerable learning aids for their own use—drawings, charts, models, etc.

For Scholars, an Honors Course

A unique incentive to further science study is the Biology Honors course. For this gifted students are selected on the basis of intelligence tests, reading score, and general attainment. Their courses require greater concentration.

Here, in particular, students come to grips with scientific reality. They relate, for example, the structure of the living cell to the building up and tearing down of the tissues of the body. They learn that photosynthesis — the incompletely-understood process by which plants transform sunlight and air into energy and growth, has a direct bearing upon the survival of the human race itself. Training of this kind, their teachers believe, gives them far greater understanding of the meaning of science than the mere mastering of a multitude of facts.

Don't let your daughter marry still in doubt about these Intimate Physical Facts but first make sure your own knowledge is SCIENTIFIC and SOUND!

The practice of vaginal douching has become so widely accepted and used today, it's no longer a question of douching but rather what a woman should put in her douche. And certainly every woman should be made to realize:

No other type liquid antiseptic-germicide tested for the douche is SO POWERFUL yet SO HARMLESS as ZONITE! Scientists tested every generally known antiseptic they could find on sale for this purpose. And no other type was so powerful yet so safe to tissues as ZONITE.

Warns Against Weak or Dangerous Products

It's a pity how many women through ignorant advice of friends still use salt, soda or vinegar for the douche. These 'kitchen makeshifts' are NOT germicides in the douche. They never were and never can be! They never can assure you the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

Women should learn the importance of using only a germicide intended for vaginal douching—one powerfully germicidal with deodorizing and dissolving qualities yet one absolutely safe to tissues. So why not enjoy ZONITE's great benefits now?

Positively Non-Irritating

ZONITE positively contains no phenol, no mercury—no harsh acids—overstrong solutions of which may damage tissues and in time even impair functional activity of the mucous glands. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without the slightest risk of injury. ZONITE is non-poisonous, non-irritating.

ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing, clinging waste substances; helps guard against infection. It immediately kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can BE SURE ZONITE DOES kill every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying.

BORDERLINE ANEMIA*
is a stumbling block to success!

PEOPLE whose faces and futures aren't rosy—pale, weary people who lack ambition and vigor may have a blood condition. A Borderline Anemia, due to a ferro-nutritional blood deficiency, is often the cause of lagging pep and drive. Your red blood cells may be too weak to transmit full energy to your body. Results of medical studies indicate as many as half of the women examined —many men and children—have this Borderline Anemia.

If this blood condition is robbing you of healthy looks and vitality take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They are specially formulated to help build up faded red blood cells. Continuing tiredness and pallor may be due to other conditions — so consult your doctor regularly. But in this Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast to start your energy and color surging back—to get fun out of life!

*Resulting from a ferro-nutritional deficiency of the blood, a condition for which Ironized Yeast is specially formulated.

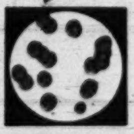
Blood that builds energy! This is how energy-building blood looks under a microscope. Here are big, plentiful red blood cells that can release vigor to all your body!



Blood in Borderline Anemia! Many have blood like this; never know it. Cells are puny, faded. Blood like this can't release the energy you need to feel and look your best.

High school Honor Course grooms scientists for tasks of tomorrow

THE Biology Honors Course of the Forest Hills High School was created for the scientists of tomorrow. Those who are selected for the course, on a basis of scholarship, are capable of a high appreciation of scientific method and its social implications. They are given work which stimulates them to develop high scientific efficiency.

As a general rule, out of 350 students who enter the science courses, from 40 to 60 eventually find themselves in the Honor class. Every student in this class takes a third year of science, and approximately 96 percent take a fourth year, continuing with physics and then chemistry. Approximately 40 percent of these will take a fifth course in the four-year period. Of the 102 students in the Honors program since 1944, 87 percent have gone on to specialize in scientific study.

The ten-point program is designed to include the widest possible range of activity. Briefly, the student is given the opportunity to (1) engage in some "original" research at the high school level, (2) learn the expert use of all types of laboratory equipment, (3) learn laboratory techniques, (4) gain special skills, (5) read college texts in biology, physics and chemistry, (6) take adequate training in mathematics, (7) prepare exhibits of his work, (8) prepare reports of his work for science journals, (9) engage in seminar activity (local high school and state groups), and (10) enter the Westinghouse Talent competition.

By the beginning of the latter half of the senior year, there are generally about 10 students who have participated in the Honors program activities. From these, come the three or four seniors who may become the professional scientists of the future.

They are given a type of apprentice training in their senior year. They may be placed in industrial, college or research laboratories to help scientists with their work.

While Forest Hills trains tomorrow's scientists, it also educates those students who do not plan to make a career of science. This two-fold program expresses the school's ultimate aim—to teach the future citizen, not merely the scientist.

Student Lisa Steiner studies effect of light on vitamin C.

Members of Forest Hills High School Camera Club put hobby to work, film details of plant growth.

Dr. Paul Brandwein demonstrates balance of nature. Sealed tube contains animal, plant life.

Be your own salesman for Tampax

Not much trouble to "sell yourself" on this internal form of monthly protection

Women in the habit of making their own decisions don't "talk to themselves" about a new product, nor do they ask much advice from others. They just act. They buy and try. Especially in a case like Tampax, which is so absolutely different in principle from the external methods of our mothers and grandmothers. . . . Just think of throwing away the whole belt-pin-pad assembly and using instead these slender insertion-applicators containing only pure surgical cotton—the whole device doctor-invented for this very purpose! No odor can form. Wearer cannot feel it—need not remove it for tub or shower or for swimming. Final disposal no embarrassment. . . . Sold at drug and notion counters for "internal absorbency." . . . TOLL HOUSE® COOKIES Recipe for America's favorite cookie on back of yellow cellophane package. AT YOUR GROCER'S

Only after her patient had been removed in an oxygen tent from a smoke-filled Chicago apartment did Nurse Lucy Koch let firemen carry her down ladder to street.

Heroic Nurse

Through smoke and fire, Lucy Koch stuck to patient

AMONG the least publicized of our public servants is the nurse whose good humor and patience has sped many a convalescence and whose courage and skill have saved many a life.

The deeds of U.S. postmen have been immortalized in slogan and song. Ballads testify to the courage of the cop and the fireman, the logger and the train engineer. But gradually the nurse has moved away from the spotlight so that today she stands back in the shadows until called-out by some moment of drama to do an act of wisdom or pity.

For years, Mrs. Lucy Koch has been taking care of the ill, the tormented, the infirm. Like thousands of other women in white, she has stayed up all night to comfort a patient, gone without rest to bring rest to another.

A few weeks ago, Mrs. Koch was called to attend a 79-year-old heart patient who lived on the second floor of a building on Chicago's East 57th Street. While she was administering a transfusion, fire broke out below.

She Leaves Via the Window

When firemen broke into the patient's apartment, Mrs. Koch refused to leave. She completed the transfusion quietly, set up an oxygen tent for her patient, saw her started for the ambulance and then left herself — in a fireman's arms.

The next day Mrs. Koch disappeared from page one. She just went back to work — and once again the shadows of obscurity swallowed her.

Roulette and Rickrack

In "Great Sinner," Ava is the gambler's daughter

In "One Touch of Venus" Ava Gardner switched from classic dances to rug-cutting, proved a very spry and witching goddess.

IN THE EIGHT years since 1941, Hollywood's luminous Ava Gardner has appeared in 19 pictures. Her costumes in all of them, however, if lumped together, would hardly outweigh the yards of period regalia she wears in "The Great Sinner" (M-G-M), her newest picture. In it, not a single gown weighs less than 25 pounds.

That Miss Gardner bears up gracefully under the combined weight of drapery and the plot of "Sinner" is a tribute to her beauty and the presence of Gregory Peck, featured with her.

For the screen play is a somewhat schmalzy mixture of Graustark and Gold Rush. In it a beautiful shill in a continental gambling casino, Mlle. Pauline (Ava), abets the evil designs of her gambling father and the casino manager, both cads.

The Perils of Pauline

Ruined at roulette, Pauline's father stakes his daughter.

Meanwhile a serious writer (Gregory Peck) has been smitten with Pauline. To retrieve her father's fortune and to safeguard her own virtue, Pauline lures him to the gaming table.

He sacrifices his own modest fortune in an effort to save her, before long becomes a shaky, unshaven ruin.

But one last spin of the wheel turns the trick. The young writer pays off his debts and wins the girl. For the fadeout, Pauline dons the prize gown in her repertoire of fabulous attire. It is a creation of frills and lace, which transforms her into the demure, good-hearted gal that she really was all the time.

Bows, furbelows and yards of lace transform Ava Gardner into a reasonably demure beauty of the 1860s. In "The Great Sinner," her first costume picture, she is co-starred with Gregory Peck.

EXPLORE YOUR MIND
BY ALBERT EDWARD WIGGAM D.Sc.
1. IS IT POSSIBLE FOR HUSBANDS AND WIVES TO TELL EACH OTHER TO "SHUT UP" WITHOUT STARTING A ROW?
YES ☐ NO ☐
2. ARE SOME PEOPLE PROUD OF THEIR FAULTS?
YES ☐ NO ☐
3. DO SOME PEOPLE HAVE BETTER LUCK THAN OTHERS?
YES ☐
NO ☐
4. PSYCHOLOGIST SAYS, "A WOMAN MUST LOOK UP TO HER MAN IF SHE WANTS TO BE HAPPY."
TRUE ☐ FALSE ☐

Answer No. 1

Yes, if they have reached the love of true understanding — and nothing else is real love. It shows also they are both emotional grownups and can take life and a punch without getting their egos punctured. Married people don't always want to listen to the other's chatter. Of course, it takes skill and judgment to say "shut up" without starting something. It has to be done in an even tone, with a smile, even a laugh —

Answer No. 2

Yes. They mistake their faults for virtues. They pride themselves in having their way "even if they have to fight for it." They boast they never change their opinions of other people, that they always vote a straight ticket and they are proud of their prejudices against Jews, Catholics, Negroes, Baptists, Presbyterians, Republicans, Democrats and all groups not their own. The pay-off is their claim that they are broad-minded.

Answer No. 3

No. Some people have more sense than others and forsee events better or are more skillful in turning them their way. The notion the universe is geared so some particular person will have better luck than others at love, business, horse races, etc., is proof of what Louis Stevenson called, "the unplumbed childishness of the human imagination." Providence and Nature play no favorites — except in intelligence and goodness.

Answer No. 4

True, but this is something every woman knows. Psychologists sometimes look very wise and yet say very commonplace things. Anybody knows a woman wants a man she can look up to. And every man wants a woman he can rely upon and look up to. When a partner in a marriage has to look down upon a mate then trouble is around the corner. Women endure such situations better, and longer, than men do.

CHECK, PALLY! THANKS A LOT. I'LL DO YOU A FAVOR SOME TIME.
FROM OVER HERE, IT SOUNDS LIKE CHOPS' LOCAL MONEY-LENDING CHUM HAS SHERLOCKED THE WHEREABOUTS OF OUR LATE UNLAMENTED PASSENGERS.
UH-HUH, THIS BUDDY'S CLIENTELE ARE THE LOCAL CABBIES AND RICKSHA BOYS. THEY TELL HIM THINGS THE POLICE WOULDN'T BE ABLE TO PRY OUT OF 'EM.
SEEMS TEEK AND FEATHER REGENT CHANGED HACKS FOUR TIMES TO COVER UP THEIR TRAIL BEFORE THEY HOLED UP IN A WATER-FRONT FLEA-TRAP CALLED "COPRA TRADER'S REST"... LET'S GO COLLECT THE REST OF THAT CHARTER DOUGH.
I DON'T GET IT! TEEK MAKES A FALSE CHARGE THAT WE'VE SMUGGLED DOPE ON THE PLANE. WHILE THE AUTHORITIES ARE SEARCHING, HE AND THE GIRL FADE. THEY GET THROUGH THE CUSTOMS GATE BY TELLING THE INSPECTOR THEY'RE VISITORS WHO'VE SPOTTED AN UNDESIRABLE ALIEN.
THE JOE CHECKS WITH THE POLICE BY PHONE AND WHEN THEY GIVE HIM A RUN-DOWN ON CHOPS' PAST RECORD, HE FIGURES THEY'RE LEVELING AND LETS 'EM BLOW. A VERY NEAT TRICK— BUT WHAT'S THEIR ANGLE?
BEATS ME — BUT IF THAT INSPECTOR HADN'T DECIDED OUR HONEST FACES WOULD KEEP CHOPS OUT OF TROUBLE, WE'D HAVE BEEN TURNED BACK ... HERE'S THE "COPRA TRADER'S REST".
AND A FEW MOMENTS LATER...
A LEAN BLOKE IN A BIG HAT AND A DARK-HAIRED GEL, SORRY, GENTS. NOBODY LIKE THAT REGISTERED 'ERE.
LOOK, PALLY! DON'T GET GAY, WE KNOW THEY CAME HERE!
IT'S AN OLD TRICK, GENTS. THEY LIKELY POPPED INTO THE LOBBY UNTIL THEIR CAB TOOK OFF, THEN JUST SAUNTERED OUT, CASUAL LIKE, AND LOST THEMSELVES IN THE CROWD.

.......MAKING A CLOUD OF STEAM...A HANDFUL OF RED POWDER ON THE FACE, A PAIR OF FALSE EYES.......

.......THEN, AS THE STEAM THINS AWAY, THERE APPEARS.....! AT THAT TIME SHE DID NOT KNOW OOM'S GENIUS FOR GETTING INTO TROUBLE!

IN LEAPING BACK FROM THE APPARITION, HE NATURALLY PULLS THE HOT WATER AND THE BURNING BRAZIER OVER ON TOP OF HIMSELF.

POOR OOM SIGHS. THINGS LIKE THIS ALWAYS SEEM TO HAPPEN JUST WHEN HE FEELS HAPPY, AND ALWAYS PEOPLE LAUGH AT HIM. WELL, GO AHEAD AND LAUGH, WINNIE!

BUT WINNIE DOES NOT LAUGH! SHE HAS NEVER HAD A PET AND NOW HEAVEN HAS SENT THIS INCOMPETENT, UTTERLY HELPLESS, COMPLETELY USELESS HUMAN. SHE WAS NEVER HAPPIER!

NEXT WEEK—Luv.

SOME OF THE NICEST PEOPLE HAVE 'EM!
I WOULDN'T HAVE THE SLIGHTEST IDEA WHAT YOU'RE DOING, BUT IF YOU JUST WANT EXERCISE YOU MIGHT START SPADING THE GARDEN!
OUR GIRLS ALL MARRIED SO WELL — I DON'T SEE WHY CECIL HAD TO FALL FOR THAT FLIBBERTIGIBBET. SHE DOESN'T KNOW THE FIRST THING ABOUT BUILDING A NEST!
CECIL NEVER DID SEEM TO CARE FOR SENSIBLE GIRLS!
YOU WOMEN GO BACK IN THE HOUSE AND WE'LL CALL YOU WHEN WE'RE READY! WE'RE FIXING A LITTLE SURPRISE AND IF WE TELL YOU WHAT IT'S GOING TO BE, IT WON'T BE A SURPRISE ANY MORE, SEE?
OH, SLUG! YOU'RE SO STRONG!
HEY, POP! CAN YOU USE THESE OLD CURTAIN RODS?
MY MOM SAID YOU COULD HAVE POP'S OLD TROMBONE. SHE'S BEEN TRYING TO GET RID OF IT FOR YEARS!
ARNOLD! I'VE GOT A HUNCH YOU'RE NOT TAKING YOUR VITAMINS. YOU NEVER ASK ME TO GO HUNTING WILD FLOWERS ANYMORE!
I'LL BET IT'S SOMETHING TO TIE YOU TO AT NIGHT, AND JUST WHEN THE NIGHTS ARE GETTING SO NICE!
BUT, FREDDIE, YOU SAID WE COULDN'T AFFORD A TELEVISION SET!
WE CAN'T! BUT THAT THING IS GOING TO LOOK MIGHTY SPORTY WHEN OUR FRIENDS DRIVE PAST OUR HOUSE
I STILL THINK WE COULD HAVE GOTTEN THE TROMBONE ON THERE SOME-PLACE!
GEE WHITH, MYRTLE! NOT THO FATHT!
YOU'RE LUCKY YOU DIDN'T CATCH YOUR TAIL IN SOMETHING LIKE THAT!
